

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

AN INTERNATIONAL DAILY NEWSPAPER

Copyright © 1982 THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PUBLISHING SOCIETY
All rights reserved

Wednesday, July 14, 1982

40¢

A Zionist initiative

Three Jewish elder statesmen have made an unprecedented statement in Paris calling for Israeli negotiations with the Palestine Liberation Organization which would lead to mutual Palestinian-Israeli recognition.

The three are Pierre Mendès France, a former prime minister of France; Nahum Goldmann, a former president of the World Zionist Organization and founder-president of the World Jewish Congress; and Philip M. Klutznick, president emeritus of the World Jewish Congress and honorary president of B'Nai B'rith International.

The statement brought a positive response from Yasser Arafat, PLO chairman, and from Isam A. Sartawi, a member of the Palestine National Council, the PLO's "parliament," a PLO representative in Paris, and a close confidant of Mr. Arafat.

The statement, now called by some observers the "Paris declaration," was challenged by organized Jewish groups in the United States, "as being unrepresentative and unhelpful."

Paris July 2, 1982

Peace need not be made between friends, but between enemies who have struggled and suffered. Our sense of Jewish history and the moral imperatives of this moment require us to insist that the time is urgent for mutual recognition between Israel and the Palestinian people. There must be a stop to the sterile debate, whereby the Arab world challenges the existence of Israel and Jews challenge the political legitimacy of the Palestinian fight for independence.

The real issue is not whether the Palestinians are entitled to their rights, but how to bring this about while ensuring Israel's security and regional stability. Ambiguous concepts such as "autonomy" are no longer sufficient, for they too often are used to confuse rather than to clarify. Needed now is the determination to reach a political accommodation between Israel and Palestinian nationalism.

The war in Lebanon must stop. Israel must lift its siege of Beirut in order to facilitate negotiations with the PLO, leading to a political settlement. Mutual recognition must be vigorously pursued. And there should be negotiations with the aim of achieving co-existence between the Israeli and Palestinian peoples based on self-determination.

Pierre Mendes France
Nahum Goldmann
Philip M. Klutznick

Paris July 2, 1982

The unprecedented statement issued today by three of the most important leaders of world Jewry has far-reaching significance. This statement contains an outline which could extricate us from the very grave crisis taking place today in Lebanon and must be viewed as a major contribution to a just and honorable peace in the Middle East.

Peace can only be concluded by the Palestinian people acting through their legitimate representative body, the PLO. But only a proud, strong and independent Palestinian leadership is capable of concluding such a peace.

The unique importance of the statement by these three courageous Jewish leaders is their recognition of this reality and their emphasis on the necessity for the peace process to be reciprocal.

I suggest that their wise insistence upon an honorable conclusion of the current conflict be urgently acted upon throughout the world.

Isam A. Sartawi

Beirut July 4, 1982

Coming at this precise moment from three Jewish personalities of great worth, worldwide reputation, and definite influence at all levels, both on the international scene and within their own community, that statement takes on a significant importance. I wish that they use their influence to put an end to the war of extermination to which the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples are subjected, and I invite them in these crucial and difficult days to visit the Palestinian camps in Lebanon so they can check by themselves the massacres and crimes committed by the Israeli forces.

Yasser Arafat

OPINION AND COMMENTARY

A Zionist initiative

Three Jewish elder statesmen have made an unprecedented statement in Paris calling for Israeli negotiations with the Palestine Liberation Organization which would lead to mutual Palestinian-Israeli recognition.

The three are Pierre Mendès France, a former prime minister of France; Nahum Goldmann, a former president of the World Zionist Organization and founder-president of the World Jewish Congress; and Philip M. Klutznick, president emeritus of the World Jewish Congress and honorary president of B'nai B'rith International.

The statement brought a positive response from Yasser Arafat, PLO chairman, and from Isam A. Sartawi, a member of the Palestine National Council, the PLO's "parliament," a PLO representative in Paris, and a close confidant of Mr. Arafat.

The statement, now called by some observers the "Paris declaration," was challenged by organized Jewish groups in the United States as being unrepresentative and unhelpful.

Paris July 2, 1982

Peace need not be made between friends, but between enemies who have struggled and suffered. Our sense of Jewish history and the moral imperatives of this moment require us to insist that the time is urgent for mutual recognition between Israel and the Palestinian people. There must be a stop to the sterile debate, whereby the Arab world challenges the existence of Israel and Jews challenge the political legitimacy of the Palestinian fight for independence.

The real issue is not whether the Palestinians are entitled to their rights, but how to bring this about while ensuring Israel's security and regional stability. Ambiguous concepts such as "autonomy" are no longer sufficient, for they too often are used to confuse rather than to clarify. Needed now is the determination to reach a political accommodation between Israel and Palestinian nationalism.

The war in Lebanon must stop. Israel must lift its siege of Beirut in order to facilitate negotiations with the PLO, leading to a political settlement. Mutual recognition must be vigorously pursued. And there should be negotiations with the aim of achieving co-existence between the Israeli and Palestinian peoples based on self-determination.

Pierre Mendès France
Nahum Goldmann
Philip M. Klutznick

Paris July 2, 1982

The unprecedented statement issued today by three of the most important leaders of world Jewry has far-reaching significance. This statement contains an outline which could extricate us from the very grave crisis taking place today in Lebanon and must be viewed as a major contribution to a just and honorable peace in the Middle East.

Peace can only be concluded by the Palestinian people acting through their legitimate representative body, the PLO. But only a proud, strong and independent Palestinian leadership is capable of concluding such a peace.

The unique importance of the statement by these three courageous Jewish leaders is their recognition of this reality and their emphasis on the necessity for the peace process to be reciprocal.

I suggest that their wise insistence upon an honorable conclusion of the current conflict be urgently acted upon throughout the world.

Isam A. Sartawi

Beirut July 4, 1982

Coming at this precise moment from three Jewish personalities of great worth, worldwide reputation, and definite influence at all levels, both on the international scene and within their own community, that statement takes on a significant importance. I wish that they use their influence to put an end to the war of extermination to which the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples are subjected, and I invite them in these crucial and difficult days to visit the Palestinian camps in Lebanon so they can check by themselves the massacres and crimes committed by the Israeli forces.

Yasser Arafat

The price of going it alone in the World Bank

By Catherine Gwin

Current United States policy toward the World Bank lacks the support of America's economic allies and diminishes its influence over the course of international financial cooperation.

The immediate cause of this isolation is Washington's failure to meet its part of an internationally negotiated refunding of the International Development Association (IDA) for the period 1981-83. IDA is the "soft loan window" of the World Bank which makes interest-free, 50-year loans to the world's poorest countries. Although Congress authorized the full three-year, $3.24 billion contribution, it appropriated significantly less in 1981 and 1982 than the US pledged and now plans to stretch out payment of the remainder due past 1983.

Other donors disapprove. Therefore, despite a burden-sharing provision in the IDA replenishment — whereby a cutback by one major donor would be matched by cutbacks by others — several countries have recently broken with US policy and have committed to their full 1982 IDA installments.

Opposition of others to recommendations in a recent US government report on the World Bank and other multilateral development banks is a second reason for America's growing isolation and declining influence. Despite a generally favorable assessment of the performance of these institutions, the report proposes that the US reduce in real terms future contributions to the "soft loan windows" of the banks; and phase out paid-in capital, which would limit future expansion of the bank's lending capacities. To offset these measures, the report recommends ways that the bank might strengthen its role as a catalyst for greater private flows to developing countries. Desirable as that catalytic function might be, it cannot yield substantially increased resources for development in the near term.

In both making the IDA cutbacks and drafting the recent report, the US seems to have been too quick to assume that other major donor countries — faced, like the US, with budgetary constraints — would welcome significant reductions in resource transfers and in the World Bank's role. Although it is now too late to affect the 1983 foreign assistance budget, it is worth considering the costs of the current course of action to US national interests. It is also worth considering how to limit the damage.

At a minimum, the US's actions reduce the economic benefits it derives from the processes of economic growth and development helped by World Bank loans. Consider two points. Every dollar from the US leverages some $15-$20 in development finance from the World Bank, which borrows, against contributions, from the private markets in order to lend to developing countries. These countries are today the fastest growing markets for US goods and services. Moreover, US firms secure a large share of the contracts offered under bank loans — $6.4 billion in contracts to US businesses for $935 million in total US contributions to the bank.

Washington's present course may also diminish the likelihood that bank financing will continue to suit US foreign policy interests. Over the years, the World Bank has promoted economic development policies supportive of a free, open, and stable world economy. It is in the US interest that these policies be continued, and a dynamic World Bank, able to help countries finance and manage economic adjustment, growth, and the elimination of abject poverty, is one of the best means for encouraging that. Moreover, today's largest World Bank borrowers are countries of importance to the America.

Finally, current policy undercuts American ability to influence World Bank operations at a time when reforms are needed to respond to changing international economic relations. The administration wants World Bank resources to be redirected and reserved for countries that have not benefited from the direct expansion of private bank lending. The administration also wants the bank to do more to encourage countries to adopt sounder macroeconomic policies. These are important issues. But the US no longer carries sufficient weight in the bank to enforce its views.

After three decades of playing a dominant role in the bank, the US has let the gap narrow between its share of contributions and votes and the shares of others. This is an appropriate response to the increased economic importance of others.

However, if the US is not to forgo as well its ability to exert constructive influence, it must neither unilaterally back out of internationally negotiated agreements nor try to dictate reforms.

Instead of either paying the piper and calling the tune or going it alone, the US should learn to exercise leadership in the pursuit of common goals. And, as a modest indication of the ability to do that, Washington should commit itself to make good on its IDA pledge by no later than 1984.

Catherine Gwin is a senior associate at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and co-author of "Collective Management: The Reform Of Global Economic Organizations."

Don't dismiss Brezhnev's nuclear pledge

By Roscoe Drummond

Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev has put President Ronald Reagan on a difficult spot, and the sooner Mr. Reagan gets off it — with credibility — the better.

These are Mr. Brezhnev's simple and carefully chosen words in the statement which Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko read in his behalf before the United Nations Conference on Disarmament. It is well to keep his exact words in mind:

"The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics assumes an obligation not to be the first to use nuclear weapons."

"This obligation will become effective immediately at the moment it is made public from the United Nations General Assembly."

It is my conviction, as one who has never been "soft" on communism nor on Soviet foreign policy, we cannot pass this proposal over lightly or dismiss it unless we want to throw away an opportunity to test Russian good faith.

When the words were pronounced at the UN the press reported that they elicited "a great roar of sustained applause" among the delegates of every nation.

As the matter now stands the Soviet offer is overwhelmingly supported by world opinion. If Mr. Reagan stands pat, his position will be overwhelmingly disapproved by world opinion and by much American opinion.

It is understandable that Mr. Reagan should be suspicious that the Soviet leader is making a meaningless promise which will not likely be carried out. There is a basis for such skepticism. In his book detailing his part in representing the White House in many of the Cuban missile crisis negotiations, Robert Kennedy disclosed that the Soviets "lied to the President 17 times," affirming that no missiles had been or were being emplaced in Cuba and keeping this up until photographs disproved these assurances.

It is altogether likely that the Soviets would not believe the US if we matched the Soviet pledge against first use. We wouldn't believe them and they wouldn't believe us.

Is there no way around this mutual disbelief?

I think there is. It is this:

If both sides are committed against the first use of nuclear weapons, there will be no nuclear war. The test as to whether both sides mean what they say is their willingness to act accordingly; namely, to agree to destroy under supervision all nuclear weapons each possesses and build no more.

There is precedent in the past policies of both superpowers.

In 1978 Foreign Minister Gromyko announced that Russia would "never fire nuclear weapons against countries which renounce their production or acquisition and do not keep them within their territory."

Why shouldn't Mr. Reagan test the validity of the pledge on no first use by proposing that both sides destroy — under on-site supervision — all nuclear weapons and guarantee they will produce no new nuclear weapons under similar supervision?

Roscoe Drummond is a longtime political commentator.

3 Jews and a Palestinian Urge Mutual Israeli-P.L.O. Recognition

The New York Times

July 3, 1982

Special to The New York Times

PARIS, July 2 — Two separate but related appeals for mutual recognition by Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization were made today by three prominent Jews and the most conspicuous moderate in the P.L.O. leadership.

In a statement issued here, Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Jewish Congress; Philip M. Klutznick, former United States Commerce Secretary, and Pierre Mendès-France, former Prime Minister of France, said that "Israel must lift its siege of Beirut in order to facilitate negotiations with the P.L.O., leading to a political settlement."

"Mutual recognition must be vigorously pursued," the statement continued, "and there should be negotiations with the aim of achieving coexistence between the Israeli and Palestinian peoples based on self-determination."

At the same time, Dr. Isam Sartawi, who is considered the leading moderate in the P.L.O.'s ruling council, published a declaration hailing the statement and calling it "a program to get us out of the crisis that is afflicting Lebanon."

Weeks of Consultations

The two declarations were the product of several weeks of consultations, culminating with a sudden trip here by Mr. Klutznick to meet with Mr. Goldmann and Mr. Mendès-France. The three men also met with Dr. Sartawi to coordinate the two statements.

The effort, conceived and executed with urgency in view of a feeling by the four that developments in Beirut allow them very little time, is aimed at showing that there is a moderate current on both sides that seeks mutual recognition instead of mutual denial.

"There must be a stop to the sterile debate whereby the Arab world challenges the existence of Israel and Jews challenge the political legitimacy of the Palestinian fight for independence," the statement by the three Jews said.

The statement went on to say, in effect, that the kind of autonomy called for by the Camp David agreements was insufficient and that there must be full national recognition by each side.

Mr. Klutznick, president-emeritus of the World Jewish Congress, said today that he and Mr. Goldmann were speaking personally and not for the organization, whose executive committee meets here next week. "I expect I will be hearing quite a bit about this then," he said.

Dr. Sartawi's public support for mutual public recognition by Israel and the P.L.O. has only quasi-official status, despite his position in the organization's council. In the past, the P.L.O. leadership has let him state his moderate views — possibly as a trial balloon — only to have them hang there, without further official endorsement or follow-up.

Underlying both statements is a theme being developed intensively in Europe by France and in the Middle East by Egypt and some of the other moderate Arab countries. Their position is that the military destruction of the P.L.O., which they regard as nearly accomplished, must not be followed by its political destruction.

To avoid this, the argument goes, something must be done to shore up the P.L.O.'s political leadership. Deprived of its military ability, it is argued, the P.L.O. will inevitably become a force for moderation and negotiation. If it is eliminated, the movement will be replaced by extremism and terrorism. This argument is being pressed on the United States by both the Egyptians and the French.

Dr. Sartawi touched on this idea in his statement, saying that "only a proud, strong and independent Palestinian leadership is capable of concluding such a peace." It was not explicitly mentioned in the other statement, but it was part of the rationale behind the drafting of it.

Foreign Minister Boutros Ghali of Egypt has been in Paris most of the week, working to develop a common position with the French. One result was a remark Thursday by Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson of France that "it is indispensable that the political side of the P.L.O. be accentuated since its military side has diminished."

The French are proposing official recognition of the P.L.O. as representatives of the Palestinians. Although they have not formally granted such recognition, there are indications that they are considering some imminent gesture in that direction.

In an interview today, Mr. Ghali spelled out the argument for making sure that the P.L.O. is not politically crushed.

"If we want a future for a continuing dialogue between the Israelis and the Palestinians, we must see that the Palestinians are not weakened to the point that all that remains is a monologue," he said.

He said the P.L.O. had been "defeated militarily," but must now be reinforced. "We in Egypt have not gotten along well with the P.L.O. in the past," he said. "But what we must have is a valid interlocutor, and if they are eliminated there will be no peace here."

It is urgent, he said, that gestures be made in the next few days to save the face of the Palestinian leadership. One of the possibilities he suggested was that Mr. Arafat be invited to put his case to one or more European parliaments.

President Hosni Mubarak has already made a move in this direction by inviting the P.L.O. to set up a government in exile in Cairo, on the condition that it abandon military means in favor of political and diplomatic ones. The Palestinian leadership has not responded.

"A crisis such as we have now can be the beginning of a new approach, a new solution," Mr. Ghali said. "It would be a pity not to use this crisis to find resolutions. In a crisis you can obtain concessions from the parties concerned that ordinarily you would not find."

The New York Times

July 4, 1982

Arafat Is Backing Plan On Mutual Recognition

PARIS, July 3 (Reuters) — Yasir Arafat, the head of the Palestine Liberation Organization, was quoted today as having supported a call by three leading Jews for Israel and the Palestinians to recognize each other's right to exist.

He was quoted by the Paris newspaper Le Monde as having said in Beirut that such a development could lead to lasting peace in the Middle East.

"The call constitutes a positive initiative toward a just and lasting peace in the Middle East," Mr. Arafat was quoted as having said. He was replying to a statement in Le Monde on Friday, urging Israel to end hostilities and open talks with the P.L.O.

The statement was made by Pierre Mendès-France, a former French Prime Minister, Philip M. Klutznick, a former United States Secretary of Commerce, and Nahum Goldmann, former head of the World Jewish Congress.

Foreign Minister Boutros Ghali of Egypt, who flew home on Friday after discussing the Lebanese situation, was also quoted today in Le Monde as having supported the declaration.

Capital FareA salute to four who spoke out for peace

By Andrew Tully

The following article represents the opinion of the author.
 WASHINGTON — At this writing, only God knows what will happen in the tragedy-plagued Middle East, but it will never be too early to pay tribute to three Jews and a Palestinian who talked good, humanitarian sense.

Their names should be inscribed in the history books: Nahum Goldman, president of the World Jewish Congress; Philip Klutznick, former U.S. Secretary of Commerce; Pierre Mendes-France, former French Prime Minister; and Dr. Isam Sartawi, a moderate member of the Palestine Liberation Organization's ruling council.

Goldman, Klutznick and Mendes-France issued a statement declaring that "Israel must...facilitate negotiations with the PLO, leading to a political settlement. Mutual recognition must be vigorously pursued, and there should be negotiations with the aim of achieving co-existence between the Israeli and Palestinian peoples based on self-determination."

Dr. Sartawi, hailed the statement of the three Jews, calling it "A program to get us out of the crisis that is afflicting Lebanon."

Statesmanship

That, my friends, is what is called statesmanship. Those four men have met the enemy and discovered that it is both sides. Their proposal is the only possible approach to a situation in which the PLO denies Israel's right to exist, and the Israelis thumb their noses at the Palestinians' fight for an independent homeland.

Klutznick, president-emeritus of the WJC, and Goldman said they were speaking personally and not for the organization in which they have been so active. They were wrong. They were speaking for humanity everywhere. They were speaking for compassion. They spoke for the art of intelligent politics. They spoke for the practical, not the hysterical.

It would be presumptuous for me to say that Klutznick counts me as a friend, but he is my friend. He is my friend because I know him and I know he is an honest and compassionate man. He is my friend just as any man or woman who does good is my friend. And Philip Klutznick has always been a friend of the good and decent.

United for Peace

Such friends of the human race, too, are Goldman, Mendes-France and Sartawi. They can subordinate feelings of race, religion and nationalism in order to make sense. In the past, they may have put their own narrow causes first. Now they have united in the cause of peace.

Those four men have simply decided it is time to abandon the sterile debate that brought misery to the Middle East. They have come forward with a solution which the Israelis and the Palestinians will reject at their considerable peril. War has solved nothing. The four say now is the time to give peace its innings.

(Continued on Page 14)

Capital Fare

(Continued from Page 1)

Israel can't survive under the guns of radical guerrillas. The Palestinians can't win a homeland for themselves with bombs. As Sartawi put it, "Only a proud, strong and independent Palestine is capable of concluding such a peace." The other three peacemakers join him in arguing that negotiations will produce a force for moderation in the PLO.

Goodman, Klutznick, Mendes-France and Sartawi. Stick those names in your hat. They come to save, not murder.

Subscribe to
THE DAILY RECORD
 Subscription Rate:
$48.00 Per Year

M. Yasser Arafat semble favorable

Une chance à saisir

La première guerre israélo-palestinienne — dont la durée dépasse déjà celle des trois conflits précédents — achève le lundi 5 juillet son premier mois d'existence sans avoir été concluante pour ceux qui l'ont déclenchée.

Le Sud-Liban n'est toujours pas totalement « nettoyé » des « terroristes » palestiniens, les dirigeants de l'O.L.P., retranchés dans leur bunker refusent de capituler, les troupes syriennes campent toujours sur le sol libanais, et on est encore bien loin d'un gouvernement « indépendant » à Beyrouth qui conclurait la paix avec Israël.

Le chef des phalangistes, M. Bachir Gemayel, est vraisemblablement en train de perdre l'occasion qu'il avait d'étendre son hégeonement sur ce Liban « souverain » auquel revient le général Sharon.

Par l'intransigeance dont il a fait preuve à Taïf, en Arabie Saoudite, où il a été reçu jeudi et vendredi par les représentants de plusieurs Etats arabes, tout disposés à lui accorder leur caution, il semble vouloir jouer à fond la « carte » israélienne. Se déclarant « plutôt pessimiste » sur le sort de Beyrouth, il n'exclut pas vendredi soir un assaut contre la capitale libanaise, lequel ne manquerait pas d'être particulièrement sanglant.

M. Bachir Gemayel se rendra peut-être compte, avant qu'il ne soit trop tard, que les évolutions sur la scène internationale favorables à l'O.L.P. sont également dans l'intérêt du Liban. En effet, la première conséquence d'une solution au problème palestinien serait de « débarrasser » son pays d'une présence encumbrante.

Un événement qui pourrait être capital à cet égard est intervenu ce samedi matin 3 juillet : M. Yasser Arafat a accueilli dans des termes chaleureux la déclaration commune de MM. Mendès-France, Nahum Goldmann et Philip Klutznick, publiée la veille dans le Monde, invitant Israël et l'O.L.P. à engager des négociations en vue d'assurer la réconciliation et la paix entre les deux peuples.

Si le gouvernement de M. Begin a encore quelque doute sur les « critiques intempestives » du chef de l'O.L.P., ne sera-t-il pas sage de le prendre au mot et de l'inviter à ouvrir des négociations ? Ce serait en tout cas dans l'intérêt du peuple israélien, de son avenir dans la région, que ses dirigeants ne laissent pas passer une telle occasion, qu'ils prétendent au moins une oreille attentive aux conseils que les amis de l'Etat juif ne cessent de leur prodiguer.

Il est pour le moins regrettable que l'ordre que l'envoyé du gouvernement français, M. Guimard, ait été éconduit à Jérusalem avec une telle désinvolture. Le secrétaire général du Quai d'Orsay représente un gouvernement qui a donné malentendu préféré son attachement indéfectible à l'existence et à la sécurité d'Israël.

Le projet de résolution que Paris et le Caire s'apprêtent à présenter au Conseil de sécurité a le double intérêt pour les Israéliens de neutraliser le Liban et en pronant notamment le retrait de toutes les forces étrangères — et d'exprimer la reconnaissance réciproque des deux peuples en conflit. Ce projet de résolution incarne en quelque sorte le rêve sunnite de faire admettre l'Etat juif dans la famille proche-orientale.

Il faut espérer que le patriottisme de MM. Begin et Sharon l'emportera sur leur volonté de régler par la force un problème de plus grande importance, et que ce soit un compromis honorable.

à une reconnaissance réciproque de l'O.L.P. et d'Israël

M. Yasser Arafat, président du comité exécutif de l'O.L.P., semble favorable à une reconnaissance réciproque d'Israël et des Palestiniens. Dans une déclaration faite à nos envoyés spéciaux à Beyrouth, il estime en effet que « l'appel de MM. Mendès-France, Goldmann et Klutznick préconisant cette double demande constitue une initiative positive vers une paix juste et durable au Proche-Orient ».

La reconnaissance réciproque d'Israël et de l'O.L.P. est également l'un des points essentiels du document de travail franco-palestinien, soumis aux Nations unies en vue du règlement de la crise libanaise. Il se confirme, par ailleurs, que M. Mitterrand se rendra en visite officielle au Caire à la mi-novembre.

M. Boutros-Ghali, ministre d'Etat égyptien chargé des affaires étrangères, nous a pour sa part déclaré, vendredi avant de quitter Paris, que « par son agression caractérisée contre les peuples libanais et palestinien, Israël avait violé les accords de Camp David ainsi que l'esprit du traité de paix entre Le Caire et Tel-Aviv » (voir en page 2). Il n'a pas exclu des sanctions contre Israël dans le cas où la situation devait s'aggraver.

Beyrouth-Ouest assiégée continue d'être soumise à une intense guerre psychologique.

De nos envoyés spéciaux

Beyrouth. — « L'appel de MM. Mendès-France, Goldmann et Klutznick constitue une initiative positive vers une paix juste et durable au Proche-Orient », a déclaré au Monde le chef de l'O.L.P., M. Yasser Arafat. Il a souligné : « Intervenant en ce moment précis et provenant de trois personnalités juives de grande valeur, de réputation mondiale et d'influence certaine à tous les niveaux, aussi bien sur le plan international qu'au sein de la communauté juive, cet appel revêt une importante signification. (...) Je souhaite que ces personnalités usent de leur influence pour arrêter la guerre d'extermination dont les peuples palestinien et libanais sont l'objet, et je les invite, on ces jours cruciaux et difficiles, à visiter les camps palestiniens du Liban pour constater, de visu, les massacres et les crimes qui y ont été commis par les forces israéliennes. »

Cet accueil positif de la part de M. Arafat est susceptible de constituer un élément déterminant dans l'évolution de la situation. En effet, dans leur appel publié dans le Monde, les trois personnalités juives affirment : « Ce qui s'impose maintenant, c'est de trouver un accord politique entre les nationalisations israéliennes et palestiniennes (...). Israël doit lever le siège de Beyrouth pour faciliter des négociations avec l'O.L.P., qui conduiront à un règlement. La reconnaissance réciproque doit être recherchée sans relâche. Des négociations doivent être entamées en vue de réaliser la coexistence entre les peuples israélien et palestinien sur la base de l'autodétermination. »

LUCIEN GEORGE
et DOMINIQUE POUCHIN.

(Lire la suite page 2.)

M. BADINTER INVITÉ DE R.T.L.-LE MONDE»

M. Robert Badinter, garde des sceaux, ministre de la Justice, sera l'invité du « Grand Jury », émission de RTL-Monde, diffusée dimanche 4 juillet, de 18 h 15 à 19 h 30. Le ministre répondra aux questions des journalistes de la station et du quotidien.

La diffusion hebdomadaire du « Grand Jury » sera suspendue pendant les mois de juillet et d'août et reprendra courant septembre.

L'avenir de la politique allemande

par ALFRED GROSSER

La politique extérieure n'est guère en question, et un changement de majorité à Bonn ne la modifierait sans doute que peu : soutien à l'économie française, dont la santé importe grandement à l'économie allemande, au point d'accepter de réévaluer le mark et de rendre ainsi plus difficiles les exportations pourtant menacées dans des secteurs importants ; pression exercée par les Etats-Unis pour qu'ils acceptent de négocier sur le règlement des investissements dans les travaux publics (construction de routes, notamment) ferait baisser la tension entre les deux partenaires de la célèbre théorie du multiplicateur d'investissements.

(Lire la suite page 4.)

UN ENTRETIEN AVEC LE NOUVEAU DÉLÉGUÉ INTERMINISTÉRIEL

Il faut mobiliser les Français contre le fléau des accidents de la route

nous déclare M. Pierre Mayet

Quelque quatre millions de Français ou de touristes étrangers vont, estiment les spécialistes, circuler sur les routes durant cette fin de semaine qui marque le début des grandes vacances. Ils courront des risques. L'an dernier, on avait, les 3 et 4 juillet, relevé 83 morts et 2 382 blessés après 1 723 accidents de la circulation.

Un nouveau délégué interministériel à la sécurité routière a été nommé, il y a quelques semaines, M. Pierre Mayet, qui — ce qui devrait le différencier de son prédécesseur, M. Christian Gérondéau, et lui donner un poids supplémentaire — est aussi directeur de la circulation

Vous avez été nommé directeur de la sécurité et de la circulation routière au ministère des transports et délégué interministériel à la sécurité routière. Comment s'articulent ces deux titres et ces deux fonctions ?

La direction du ministère des transports qui m'a été confiée est chargée de la réglementation routière, de la réglementation technique des véhicules et de l'intervention en matière de sécurité et de circulation sur le réseau national. Elle apparaît donc comme le véritable organe administratif et le plus efficace pour le délégué interministériel qui me déléguera.

En confiant à la même personne cette double responsabilité, le gouvernement a volonté faire fincement entre deux structures administratives parallèles, l'une chargée de concevoir la politique de sécurité routière, et l'autre chargée d'en mettre en œuvre la plus grande partie des moyens essentiels.

C'est donc une simplification, une réforme administrative qui va faire en sorte que la sécurité routière soit fixée au pays d'un objectif ambitieux : réduire d'un tiers en cinq ans le nombre d'unités de production automobile du trafic, c'est-à-dire sauver la vie de près de 4 000 Français en 1986.

On note depuis quatre ans ce que ces services appellent « stabilisation » des progrès de la sécurité routière. L'an dernier, on a encore complété 12 428 tués et 334 000 blessés des accidents de la route. Comment envisagez-vous l'avenir ?

Oui, les chiffres restent malheureusement stables... ce qui signifie quand même un petit progrès au véhicule-kilomètre si l'on tient compte de la légère croissance de la circulation. Si la position de France, au plan national de la sécurité routière, dans les années 80 n'est pas catastrophique, elle n'est pas brillante pour autant.

Le premier ministre et le comité interministériel de la sécurité routière ont fixé au pays un objectif ambitieux : réduire d'un tiers en cinq ans le nombre d'unités de production automobile du trafic, c'est-à-dire sauver la vie des places publiques.

Cette sculpture, si nous la connaissons mal, c'est qu'il faut la voir, nous ne la regardons plus, sinon avec le sourire qu'appelle aujourd'hui encore le manichéisme des jugements portés sur l'art pompe et jusqu'à ces dernières années, l'étude critique comme ailleurs la redécouverte et de l'itation.

D'où l'intérêt de l'exposition

Carpœux à Malise, qui comptoir, à partir de sources respectives, les muses du Nord : Caen, Liège, Boulogne. Les pièces sont limité, mais certaines réserves surprises, et il faut porter le catalogue du musée, des notices détaillées sur l'artiste et un ensemble de très bonne qualité.

ANDRÉ FERRAT

Le blocage des prix et des revenus impose une rigueur accrue pour la préparation du budget

Le gouvernement met actuellement au point le projet de budget pour 1983 en tenant compte des mesures récentes concernant le blocage des prix et des revenus, mesures à propos desquelles les syndicats ont bien du mal à définir l'attitude à adopter. Le projet de budget s'efforce de casser les échéanciers inflationnistes. Il comporte cependant la création de vingt mille postes de fonctionnaires, qui s'ajoutent aux cent vingt-cinq mille emplois créés depuis juin 1981 dans la fonction publique.

Ces postes supplémentaires entraînent une dépense annuelle d'environ 3 milliards de francs. La question de leur utilité se pose au moment où M. Fabius déclare que la gauche doit montrer sa capacité de gérer et de pratiquer une politique selective, le déficit budgétaire ayant atteint des limites à ne pas dépasser.

De bon usage de l'argent public

par ALAIN VERNHOLLES

La création de postes nouveaux dans la fonction publique illustre et résume bien un problème essentiel que pose le rôle de l'Etat dans l'économie : toute dépense publique est-elle bonne en soi parce qu'elle crée de l'activité ou y a-t-il des dépenses inutiles et même néfastes quand le gouvernement, ne pouvant pas les financer, doit faire appel à la création monétaire ?

M. Mitterrand avait abordé la question avant son élection en promettant de créer 210 000 emplois publics, il devrait prescrire de l'Etat : 60 000 pour l'Etat seul, 150 000 pour l'Etat social, 60 000 pour le personnel et législatives : relance par la dépense (consommation et investissements), création massive d'emplois dans la fonction publique. On retrouve là comme un écho lointain des thèses qui, avec Richard-Ferdinand Kahn (1), à Krasucki, ont misé entre la promotion et la seconde guerre mondiale l'entreprise privée étant incapable de seule assurer le plein emploi, l'Etat doit intervenir.

M. Mitterrand avait abordé la question avant son élection en promettant de créer 210 000 emplois publics trop hostiles au travail. « Nous ne sommes pas contre un travailleur », a déclaré M. Krasucki après sa victoire, avec le F.O., au meeting syndical, M. Pommery indique : « Si y a un débat de la discussion, nous suggérons les actions qui posent. » Même attitude C.G.C., C.F.T.C. et chez qui envisagent aussi une manifestation « ... y a une discipline des salaires ». Confirmant leur hostilité, certains, comme F.O., la C.G.T., F.N.F. ne veulent pas non plus paralysie trop hostiles au travail. « Nous ne sommes pas contre le gouvernement », a déclaré M. Krasucki après sa victoire, avec le F.O., au meeting syndical, M. Pommery indique : « Si y a un débat de la discussion, nous suggérons les actions qui posent. » Même attitude C.G.C., C.F.T.C. et chez qui envisagent aussi une manifestation « ... y a une discipline des salaires », et accepté avec grogne, mais avec un refus d'accordage de négociations.

Les discussions à Matignon, le 9 juillet, sur les 60 000 postes fonctionnaires, le 15 juillet, entre le privé et les salariés, devraient assez rapidement être terminées. Ces derniers, embarrassés, doivent tenir compte de grèves telles qui portent partiellement les conditions de travail, aussi sur les salaires comme à la S.N.C.F. — l'emploi dans la sidérurgie traduisent un réel malaise.

Tout « en trainant qu'il le peuvent », les associations combatives de certains secteurs, notamment les dirigeants des compagnies, doivent remplir leur rôle : ne pas attaquer directement le gouvernement mais ne pas céder pressions. D'où la nécessité de rester l'arme à feu sociale à l'orange.

(Lire la suite page 22.)

(1) Professeur à Cambridge, a écrit en 1981 une étude démontrant que des investissements dans les travaux publics (construction de routes, notamment) ferait baisser la tension entre les partenaires du multiplicateur d'investissements.

AU JOUR LE JOUR

RÉSISTANCE

Les résultats du premier sondage sur le statut de Paris sont éloquents. A la question : « Voulez-vous être brisé, écartelé, démantelé, décharné, dépecé vif et payer plus d'impôts ? », la majorité des Parisiens a répondu « non ». Surtout pour les impôts !

D'ailleurs, dès le 1^{er} juillet, l'exode des résistants parisiens en direction des marais de Sud commence...

HENRI MONTANT.

LA SCULPTURE DU XIX^e SIÈCLE À LI

Un sauvetage réussi

Rodin et Carpeaux exceptés, à la rigueur Baye et Rude, la sculpture est devenue la grande mal-aimée du xix^e siècle, qui vit pourtant une grande gloire et sa plus grande fécondité. Le xix^e siècle a été le siècle de la « statuomanie », comme dit Maurice Agulhon, du monument commémoratif, du souvenir des grands hommes et des bons citoyens confié à la pierre ou au bronze, de l'allégorie brandissant ses attributs au fronton des palais, dans les jardins, dans les cimetières, sur la montagne des places publiques.

Cette sculpture, si nous la connaissons mal, c'est qu'il faut la voir, nous ne la regardons plus, sinon avec le sourire qu'appelle aujourd'hui encore le manichéisme des jugements portés sur l'art pompe me et jusqu'à ces dernières années, l'étude critique comme ailleurs la redécouverte et de l'itation.

D'où l'intérêt de l'exposition

Carpœux à Matisse, qui

SPECIAL BOUQUINS

TOUT CE QUE VOUS N'AVEZ JAMAIS VOULU SAVOIR SUR L'AUTOMOBILE

Lire p 14

3,80 F • SAMEDI 3 ET DIMANCHE 4 JUILLET 1982

• N° 350

2 EDITION

Libération >

Israéliens-Palestiniens

MENDES FRANCE PROPOSE LA PAIX DES BRAVES

• En compagnie de deux autres personnalités du judaïsme mondial, Nahum Goldman, ancien président du congrès juif mondial, et Philip Klutznick, ancien ministre du commerce de Jimmy Carter, l'ancien président du conseil français a lancé hier un appel à la négociation entre Israël et l'OLP. « Il faut mettre fin, déclarent-ils, au débat stérile dans lequel le monde arabe conteste l'existence d'Israël et les juifs contestent le droit des Palestiniens à l'indépendance ». Leur initiative s'est doublée d'une déclaration d'Issam Sertawi, conseiller politique de Yasser Arafat.

• Vendredi soir, le conseil de sécurité a été averti d'une prochaine initiative franco-égyptienne, concernant non seulement la guerre du Liban mais toute la situation au Proche Orient. Lire pages 2 à 4 et 36.

Le quotidien du

MONDE

L'entraîneur irlandais nous déclare : « La France est le dernier obstacle sur notre route ».

DIMANCHE À MADRID: LES FRANÇAIS DANS L'ANTICHAMBRE DU PARADIS

Platini jouera
« évidemment » nous explique Michel Hidalgo.

L'ESPAGNE AUX ENFERS

La chronique de Jean-Marc Guillou. Lire pages 17 à 20.

BATAILLE DE PARIS PAUL QUILES S'EXPLIQUE SUR LE PROJET SOCIALISTE

Le secrétaire national du PS et l'un des candidats socialistes possibles à la mairie développe le projet de réforme de Paris et menace Chirac de faire le bilan de ses gaspillages. Lire pages 6, 7 et 8.

EDITORIAL

Une opportunité

Il y a quatre, trois plus un. Trois Juifs, un Français, un Américain et l'ancien président du Congrès juif mondial, trois hommes d'Etat, trois amis d'Israël, trois consciences discutables à Jérusalem, à New York comme à Paris. Le quatrième est Palestinien, conseiller d'Arafat, et il mûrit depuis des années pour une reconnaissance réciproque de l'Etat d'Israël et de l'OLP. Quatre qui n'ont pas eu peur de l'impuissance des mots face au vertige de la guerre, qui ont eu le courage de venir à l'avant-scène ou se joue la tragédie israélo-palestinienne, après cinq actes d'holocauste, pour déclarer qu'il importait désormais de faire la paix. Le vrai courage, celui qui consiste à se désolidariser apparemment de ses propres amis afin de bouculer le cours des choses, de créer les opportunités décisives.

Il a manifestement pas échappé à ces quatre hommes, à ces quatre avaleurs de la raison raisonnante que cette guerre ne ressemblait à aucune de celles dans lesquelles Israël s'était engagé à quatre reprises.

C'est en effet la première guerre israélo-palestinienne. Toutes les autres étaient israélo-arabes. D'un côté, le petit Etat israélien, de l'autre le monde arabe qui, en 1948, ne fait pas encore, et qui allait le revenir avec Nasser. Le Rais avait trouvé dans la cause palestinienne une mystique propre à cimentier un monde profondément discordant, une langue culturelle capable de porter sur sa crête des États naissants.

Cause palestinienne était venu un emblème, en réalité, le souffrir un prétexte pour des ambitions politiques, territoriales personnelles. On vénérait la cause, mais on massacrait au soin, pour le moins on expulsait pourtant au nom desquels les cours officiels s'écrivaient et revêtaient.

Cette machine a été détraquée par trois hommes : Sadate d'abord, Khomeini ensuite, aron enfin.

Le premier eut l'audace d'avouer qu'il ne s'agissait que d'un texte et de reconnaître que la cause égyptienne prévalait en fin de compte sur toutes les autres. Le second, avec sa révolution régieuse, puis avec sa victoire sur l'Irak, a remis les pendules à l'heure dans le monde arabe : sa cause mystique s'attaque à tous les hiérarchies de cette partie du monde, et chacun de craindre que le détournement d'une croisade à leurs fins, il ne prenne, lui aussi, le chemin des lieux-saints.

Il va sans dire que tout son passage, fin, le troisième a déclenché une guerre de teneur à transformer Israël en grande puissance hébreu-orientale.

Ce faisant, cette guerre a révélé la fin d'un mythe : celui du monde arabe défenseur de la cause palestinienne et, par voie de conséquence, Israël s'est retrouvé face à face avec l'OLP, engagé dans la première guerre israélo-palestinienne. La plus longue guerre d'Israël, une guerre enfin dont les paravents antérieurs ont disparus : celui de la « solidarité du monde arabe », comme celui de « la sécurité d'Israël ».

Simplement, une guerre entre deux nationalismes armés. Et cette guerre a atteint cet exceptionnel moment de vérité, où elle devient aussi effrayante aux uns et aux autres, aux Israéliens comme aux Palestiniens. Ce moment s'appelle la bataille de Beyrouth. Beyrouth n'est pas seulement un piège pour l'OLP, c'en est un aussi pour Israël. L'assaut serait meurtrier pour Israël : les experts prévoient un millier de morts du côté de Tsahal pour venir à bout du redoutable palestinien. Humainement meurtrier des deux côtés, il le serait aurait, sinon plus — si l'on peut dire — « moralement » pour un pays, édifié sur ce que Mendès France et ses compagnons appellent « le sens de l'histoire juive ».

En lançant cette guerre, Sharon n'imaginait sans doute pas qu'il allait reconnaître implicitement l'OLP comme embryon de la nation palestinienne. C'est pourtant le résultat qu'il a paradoxalement atteint, au terme — provisoire — de pres d'un mois de guerre. De telle sorte qu'une victoire militaire à Beyrouth serait, à terme pour Israël, une catastrophe politique et morale. Une bataille au terme de laquelle il n'y aurait plus, cette fois, que des vaincus.

C'est la conscience de cette situation qui est à l'origine de l'initiative de ces quatre hommes pour une reconnaissance réciproque. Sauver Israël, cette fois, c'est reconnaître le nationalisme palestinien et l'OLP. Sauver les Palestiniens, c'est aussi reconnaître l'existence de l'Etat d'Israël et garantir la sécurité de ses frontières. A leur manière, ils poursuivent en approfondissant le geste de Sadate se rendant à la Knesset. Leur appel sanctionne, en réalité, ce fait nouveau : l'invasion du Liban par l'armée israélienne a ouvert la voie à la reconnaissance réciproque des deux nationalismes. L'Histoire, qui aime les voies tortueuses, n'en est pas à un revers près.

Il est peu probable néanmoins que Begin et Sharon entendent cet appel. Leur logique guerrière leur rend inaudible. N'est pas De Gaulle qui veut pour proposer la « paix des braves ».

L'ÉVÉNEMENT

« Le temps est venu d'une reconnaissance réciproque ».

Mendès France appelle à la paix des braves

En compagnie de Nahum Goldman et Philip Klutznick, l'ancien président du Conseil a lancé hier un appel à une négociation entre Israël et l'OLP.

L'appel rendu public, vendredi après midi dans le Monde et signé par trois personnalités juives de premier plan, Pierer Mendès France, ancien président du conseil, Nahum Goldman, ancien président du congrès juif mondial, et Philippe Klutznick qui fut son successeur, ainsi que ministre du commerce de l'administration Carter — et qui serait un ami du secrétaire d'Etat Shultz — brisé, au beau milieu de la guerre, un tabou de taille : celui du dialogue israélo-palestinien. Cet appel était accompagné d'une autre déclaration, celle d'un Palestinien, le professeur Issam Sartaoui (Libération du 30 juin), conseiller d'Arafat et franc tireur chargé depuis longtemps, notamment des contacts avec la gauche israélienne (lire ci-dessous).

Cette double initiative a été mise au point par quatre hommes qui se connaissent depuis plusieurs années. Rapidement décidée, elle conclut en effet plusieurs années de contacts privés entre quelques personnalités juives, palestiniennes et israéliennes. Depuis le début des années soixante-dix, plusieurs colloques et rencontres ont ainsi eu lieu à Rome, aux Etats-Unis, à Londres ainsi qu'en France. Une première initiative avait été prise par Henri Curiel pour que se rencontrent, d'abord des Egyptiens et des Israéliens de gauche. Uri Avneri, colonel israélien et député du Sheli, y avait participé, rejoint après la guerre de 73 par le général Peled. Issam Sartaoui qui fut, à partir de 1974, à la charnière de ces initiatives, avait d'abord été désavoué par le conseil national palestinien, dont il était membre.

Le climat n'était pas mûr pour de tels contacts. Les rencontres étaient privées, quasi secrètes, et très protégées : à l'intérieur même de l'OLP, la bataille faisait rage entre modérés et radicaux, et certains régimes arabes voyaient d'un mauvais œil l'établissement de tels contacts.

D'autres rencontres eurent également lieu entre universitaires palestiniens et militants du MAPAM israélien. A Jérusalem même, un colloque avait eu lieu en 1978 au moment même où Sadate annonçait sa venue dans la ville, puis un autre à Washington, en 1980, où les maires palestiniens de Cisjordanie, invités, ne s'étaient finalement pas rendus.

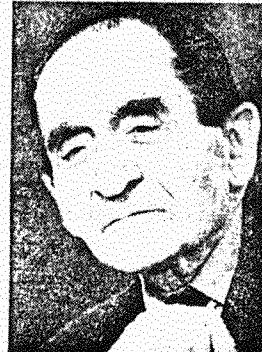

Il aura fallu, paradoxalement, cette longue guerre du Liban pour que soit rendu public un tel appel « à mettre fin au débat stérile dans lequel le monde arabe conteste l'existence d'Israël et les Juifs contestent le droit des Palestiniens ». Mais il est à craindre que la référence explicite à une négociation entre Israël et l'OLP n'ait que peu d'écho en Israël, le jour même où un sondage indique que 93 % des citoyens sont favorables à la destruction de l'OLP.

L'appel de Pierre Mendès France, Nahum Goldman et Philip Klutznick

La paix ne se conclut pas entre amis, mais entre ennemis qui ont lutté et ont souffert. Notre sens de l'histoire juive et les impératifs de l'heure nous conduisent à affirmer que le temps est venu pour la reconnaissance réciproque d'Israël et du peuple palestinien. Il faut mettre fin au débat stérile dans lequel le monde arabe conteste l'existence d'Israël et les Juifs contestent le droit des Palestiniens à l'indépendance.

La véritable question n'est pas de savoir si les Palestiniens ont ce droit, mais comment le réaliser tout en garantissant la sécurité d'Israël ainsi que la stabilité de la région.

Des concepts tels que l'autonomie ne suffisent plus, car ils ont été davantage utilisés pour esquerir que pour clarifier. Ce qui s'impose, maintenant, c'est de trouver un accord politique entre les nationalismes israélien et palestinien.

La guerre au Liban doit cesser. Israël doit lever le siège de Beyrouth pour

La déclaration d'Issam Sartaoui

La déclaration sans précédent publiée aujourd'hui par trois des plus importantes personnalités du judaïsme mondial a une très grande signification. Cette déclaration confirme un programme pour nous servir de la crise qui sevit au Liban. Elle est une contribution majeure à la recherche d'une paix juste et honorable au Proche-Orient.

Cette paix ne pourra être conclue que par le peuple palestinien s'exprimant par sa représentation légitime, l'OLP. Mais uniquement une direction faciliter des négociations avec l'OLP, qui conduiront à un règlement. La reconnaissance réciproque doit être recherchée sans relâche. Des négociations doivent être entamées en vue de réaliser la coexistence entre les peuples israélien et palestinien sur la base de l'autodétermination. »

RÉACTIONS

Le représentant de la Ligue Arabe à Paris, M. M'Hammed Yazid, nous a déclaré hier : « La déclaration à laquelle s'est associé M. Mendès France contient un élément positif, à savoir la reconnaissance de l'OLP comme seul interlocuteur palestinien pour une solution sur la base du droit à l'autodétermination. M. Mendès-France rejette ainsi l'élan de l'opinion publique française, qui découvre enfin la réalité de la colonisation et de l'agression israélienne. »

Le général de réserve Matti Peled a déclaré à notre envoyée spéciale à Jérusalem : « C'est une démarche importante, mais elle n'aura aucun effet sur notre gouvernement... Cette déclaration représente un véritable soutien au Mouvement de la paix mais le gouvernement Begin vient de recevoir le soutien officiel des communautés juives de France, ce qui est beaucoup plus important à ses yeux que les prises de position de trois individus. Ceci dit, cet appel émanant de grandes personnalités juives ne peut pas ne pas avoir un certain effet sur l'opinion publique en Israël. »

CONTENTS.

LETTERS

66

EDITORIALS

- 65 The Right to Read
- 67 Start Talking
- 68 Patient Neglect
- 69 Marti Calling

ARTICLES

- 65 Deregulatory Agencies: Reaganism is Harmful To Your Health Michael Pertschuk
- 70 Knowing Right Laws From Wrong: Straight Talk About the Insanity Defense Bruce J. Ennis
- 72 Ad Game in El Salvador: The Selling of D'Aubuisson Wayne Biddle
- 74 West Beirut and the West Bank: General Sharon's Man in Samaria Christopher Hitchens

Editor, Victor Navasky

Executive Editor, Richard Lingeman; Associate Editor, Kai Bird; Assistant Editor, Eric Etheridge; Literary Editor, Katha Pollitt; Assistant Literary Editor, Elena Brunet; Poetry Editor, Grace Schulman; Copy Editor, Janet Gold; Assistant Copy Editor, Judith Long; Editorial Assistant, JoAnn Wypijewski; Editorial Secretary, Clia Lyon; Interns, Jeff Bidulph, Jonathan Birchall, Sam Delson, Darcy Frey, Alice Garbarini, Richard Kaye, Jane Oski, Jeff Schwaber, Nancy Schwartz, Sara Seigle. On leave, Barbara Dudley Davis, Robert Sherrill.

*Departments: Architecture, Jane Holtz Kay; Films, Robert Hatch; Music, David Hamilton; Correspondents: Latin America, Penny Lernoux; Europe, Daniel Singer; London, Raymond Williams; Paris, Claude Bourdet; Columnists and Regular Contributors: Calvin Trillin (Uncivil Liberties), Thomas Ferguson & Joel Rogers (The Political Economy), Elizabeth Farnsworth & Stephen Talbot (Dispatches). Contributing Editors, Blair Clark, Christopher Hitchens, Herman Schwartz, Gore Vidal. Editorial Board: James Baldwin, Norman Birnbaum, Richard Falk, Frances FitzGerald, Philip Green, Elinor Langer, Robert Lekachman, Sidney Morgenbesser, Aryeh Neier, Elizabeth Pochoda, Marcus G. Raskin, A.W. Singham, Roger Wilkins, Alan Wolfe.*

The Nation is available on microfilm from: University Microfilms, 300 North Zeeb Rd., Ann Arbor, MI 48106.

EDITORIALS.

Start Talking

Menachem Begin has chosen to wage what he hopes will be the final battle against the Palestine Liberation Organization in Lebanon; thus the rejectionists of both sides are locked in the ultimate face-off. But are they all rejectionists? On July 13, The New York Times published an interview with Yasir Arafat by Uri Avnery, the Israeli journalist and former Begin gadfly in the Knesset. Arafat spoke of peace between "two separate states," expressed his "approval for the American-Soviet communique in October 1977" and declared that "the Fahd proposals are a very good platform

Volume 235, Number 3

- | | |
|---|---|
| 75 Remembering the Dutchmen:
One Way to Kill the Story | Anne Nelson |
| 79 Laxalt Goes to Washington:
The Senator and the Gamblers | Bob Gottlieb and
Peter Wiley |

BOOKS & THE ARTS

- | | |
|--|-----------------------------|
| 85 Greenfield: The Real Campaign:
The Media and the
Battle for the White House | Dean Valentine |
| 86 Siciliano: Pasolini: A Biography
Pasolini: Poems | Alexander Stille |
| 88 Appearances (poem) | Shirley Kaufman |
| 89 Kumin: Our Ground Time Here Will Be Brief
Why Can't We Live Together Like
Civilized Human Beings? | Clara Claiborne Park |
| 90 Sennett: The Frog
Who Dared to Croak | Richard Howard |
| 92 Theater | Richard Gilman |
- Drawings by Isidore Seltzer

Publisher, Hamilton Fish 3rd

Advertising Manager, Carole Kraemer; Business Manager, Ann B. Epstein; Bookkeeper, Gertrude Silverston; Art/Production Manager, Jane Sharples; Circulation Manager, Stephen King; Subscription Manager, Stephen W. Soule; Classified, Deborah Kriger; Director of Development and Publicity, Laurie Lipper; Receptionist, Greta Loell; Mail Clerk, John Holtz; Administrative Secretary, Shirley Sulat; Nation Associates, Claudine Bacher; Nation News Service, Jeff Sorenson; Publishing Consultant, Jack Berkowitz.

The Nation (ISSN 0027-8378) is published weekly (except for the first week in January, and biweekly in July and August) by Nation Enterprises and © 1982 in the U.S.A. by the Nation Associates, Inc., 72 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10011. Tel.: 212-242-8400. Subscription Mail Address: Nation Subscription Service, P.O. Box 1953, Marion, Ohio 43305. Second-class postage paid at New York, N.Y., and at additional mailing offices. International Telex: 667 155 NATION.

Regular Subscription Price: One year, $35; two years, $65; six months, $17.50. Add $7 per year postage Canada, Mexico; $13 per year other foreign. All foreign subscriptions must be paid in equivalent U.S. funds. Claims for missed issues must be made within 60 days of publication date; back issues available $3 prepaid ($4 foreign). Please allow 6-8 weeks for receipt of your first issue and for all subscription transactions. Subscription orders, changes of address and all subscription inquiries should be sent to: The Nation, Subscription Services, P.O. Box 1953, Marion, Ohio 43305.

for a solution in the Middle East." Avnery asked Arafat to elucidate his commitment to the 1977 communique, which says, he pointed out, "that the security of all states in the area, including Israel, which it explicitly mentions, will be safeguarded." Arafat replied, "You see, when we have said O.K. to this initiative, this means that we accepted all its items. We said that it is a good platform for a peaceful settlement." And he added: "We are ready to live in any part of Palestine from which the Israelis withdraw or which will be liberated. Any part?"

Is Arafat a rejectionist or not? His words surely satisfied in spirit, if not in the letter of a formal diplomatic instrument, Washington's sole condition for face-to-face negotiations between the United States and the P.L.O.: recognition of Israel's right to exist. On July 13, another P.L.O. official, Issam Sartawi, seemed to give official confirmation to Arafat's point. In a speech in Paris, Sartawi said, "The P.L.O. has formally conceded to Israel in the most unequivocal manner the right to exist on a reciprocal basis." Sartawi asserted that his statement could not be repudiated and that he was speaking "on the firmest official ground—on behalf of the governing body of the P.L.O.—the Palestinian National Council."

For some time now we have suspected that the issue of who should recognize whom first—the P.L.O., Israel or Israel, the P.L.O.—is a pseudo-issue, a semantic smokescreen. Arafat is a skillful player of this word game. So is Begin. And the State Department has joined them with its July 14 statement that Sartawi's words do "not appear to meet the position we have laid out" on U.S. recognition of the P.L.O. The Reagan Administration apparently wants something more "formal" than Sartawi's "formal" concession "to Israel in the most unequivocal manner the right to exist on a reciprocal basis." The word game continues.

But the death toll in Lebanon is real, regardless of the controversy over numbers. The war must stop. The killing of civilians must stop. And the flattening of part of a modern city with a population of half a million people must be averted. Negotiations must begin, and that means each side must start to talk seriously to the other. The State Department's special mediator, Philip Habib, clearly cannot effectively negotiate through middlemen—as he is now trying to do. Despite the middlemen, he is negotiating with the P.L.O. The pretense that he is not should be dropped. For the United States to talk directly with the P.L.O. would not constitute an endorsement of the call in the latter's charter for the destruction of the Jewish state. In fact, such talks might well be the catalyst for the dropping of this clause. And in the context of the present crisis, they could give Arafat the face-saving concession he needs to go back to his followers and persuade them to lay down their arms and leave Beirut.

We believe that a negotiated settlement, one that would bring about genuine Palestinian self-determination while insuring Israel's security, is possible. The mutual-recognition formula is a good one, but it cannot be implemented until a determined and influential mediator steps in to bring the parties together. Both Israelis and Palestinians distrust the United States—and with good reason. America has played both sides of the street in the Middle East and has never hesitated to intervene in the internal affairs of the countries concerned. Unfortunately, however, Israel's military and economic dependence on the United States (which began after its "victory" in the 1967 war), and the Arab world's client relationship with Washington because of the strategic importance of its oil, have put George Shultz and the boys from Bechtel in the mediator's seat. Only the United States can compel serious negotiations, and to do so it must break through the semantic barrier—its unwillingness to negotiate "directly" with a P.L.O. it does not "recognize." If direct talks with the P.L.O. could lead to mutual recognition between Israel and the Palestinians, can we any longer afford to let the semantics of nonrecognition stand in their way?

The Washington Post recently published a short statement signed by Pierre Mendes France, former prime minister of France; Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Jewish Congress; and Philip M. Klutznick, former U.S. Secretary of Commerce and now honorary international president of B'nai B'rith. Their statement is reprinted in the box below, and included in it are two sentences that The Post, curiously, omitted. They are: "The war in Lebanon must stop. Israel must lift its siege of Beirut in order to facilitate negotiations with the P.L.O., leading to a political settlement." (Emphasis added.) If mutual recognition is the first step to a peaceful settlement, then the Israelis need someone in West Beirut with whom to negotiate. Peace now is an aspiration, but direct negotiations are an obvious precondition.

Peace need not be made between friends, but between enemies who have struggled and suffered. Our sense of Jewish history and the moral imperative of this moment require us to insist that the time is urgent for mutual recognition between Israel and the Palestinian people. There must be a stop to the sterile debate whereby the Arab world challenges the existence of Israel and Jews challenge the political legitimacy of the Palestinian fight for independence.

The real issue is not whether the Palestinians are entitled to their rights, but how to bring this about while ensuring Israel's security and regional stability. Ambiguous concepts such as "autonomy" are no longer sufficient, for they too often are used to confuse rather than to clarify. Needed now is the determination to reach a political accommodation between Israeli and Palestinian nationalism.

The war in Lebanon must stop. Israel must lift its siege of Beirut in order to facilitate negotiations with the P.L.O., leading to a political settlement. Mutual recognition must be vigorously pursued, and there should be negotiations with the aim of achieving co-existence between the Israeli and the Palestinian peoples based on self-determination.

Pierre Mendes France
Nahum Goldmann
Philip M. Klutznick

A2 Jewish and Palestinian appeals for mutual recognition made pursued," the statement said, "and there public position of even moderate groups, the statement goes even farther by should be negotiations with the aim of achieving coexistence between the Israeli and Palestinian peoples based on self-determination."

At the same time, Issar Sartawi, who is considered the leading dove among the PLO's ruling council, published a declaration bailing the statement and calling it "a program to get Mr. Goldmann were speaking personally and for the World Jewish Congress, whose executive committee meets next week." I expect I will be hearing quite a bit about this then," he said.

As for Mr. Sartawi, his public support of mutual public recognition between Israel and French. In an interview yesterday, he outlined the argument for making sure that the PLO is not politically crushed. "If we want a future for a continuing dialogue between the Israelis and the Palestinians, we must see that the Palestinians are not weakened to the point that all that remains is a monologue," he said. "They are defeated militarily. Now we must find means to reinforce them. We in Egypt, and in Europe by France. That is the military destruction of the PLO, Egypt have not gotten along well with the PLO in the past. But what we must have is a valid interlocutor, and if they are eliminated there will be no peace here."

It is urgent, he said, that gestures be made in the next few days to save the face of the Palestinian leadership.

In an interview yesterday, he outlined the argument for making sure that the PLO is not politically crushed. "If we want a future for a continuing dialogue between the Israelis and the Palestinians, we must see that the Palestinians are not weakened to the point that all that remains is a monologue," he said. "They are defeated militarily. Now we must find means to reinforce them. We in Egypt, and in Europe by France. That is the military destruction of the PLO, which these countries regard as pretty much accomplished, must not be followed by its political destruction.

Egypt's foreign minister, Boutros Ghali, has been in Paris most of the week, working to develop a common position with the Palestinian leadership.

Mr. Goldmann, his public support of mutual public recognition between Israel and the PLO has only quasi-official status, despite his position on the organization's council.

New York Times News Service

Paris — Two separate but related appeals for mutual recognition between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization were made yesterday, one by three prominent Jewish figures, the other by the most conspicuous moderate in the PLO leadership.

In a statement issued in Paris, Nahim Goldman and Philip Klutznick, of the World Jewish Congress, and former French Prime Minister Pierre Mendes-France said that "Israel must lift its siege of Beirut in order to facilitate negotiations with the PLO, leading to a political settlement."

"Mutual recognition must be vigorously

ADVERTISEMENT

THE JEWISH WEEK

Serving Maryland, Virginia and D.C.

AUGUST 19-25, 1982

ADVERTISEMENT

An Unprecedented Call For CO-EXISTENCE BETWEEN THE ISRAELI AND PALESTINIAN PEOPLES

We are American Jews, committed to the survival of the State of Israel, who endorse the following statement issued on July 2, 1982 by three internationally prominent Jewish leaders.

Below is a statement, in the original English, issued by Dr. Nahum Goldmann, Philip M. Klutznick and Pierre Mendes France. Dr. Nahum Goldmann is Former President of the World Zionist Organization and Founder-President of the World Jewish Congress. Philip M. Klutznick is Former U.S. Secretary of Congress, President Emeritus of the World Jewish Congress, and Honorary President of Bnai Brith International. Pierre Mendes France is Former Prime Minister of France.

Peace need not be made between friends, but between enemies who have struggled and suffered. Our sense of Jewish history and the moral imperatives of this moment require us to insist that the time is urgent for mutual recognition between Israel and the Palestinian people. There must be a stop to the sterile debate, whereby the Arab world challenges the existence of Israel and Jews challenge the political legitimacy of the Palestinian fight for independence.

The real issue is not whether the Palestinians are entitled to their rights, but how to bring this about while ensuring Israel's security and regional stability. Ambiguous concepts such as "autonomy" are no longer sufficient, for they too often are used to confuse rather than to clarify. Needed now is the determination to reach a political accommodation between Israeli and Palestinian nationalisms.

The war in Lebanon must stop. Israel must lift its seige of Beirut in order to facilitate negotiations with the PLO, leading to a political settlement. Mutual recognition must be vigorously pursued. And there should be negotiations with the aim of achieving co-existence between the Israeli and Palestinian peoples based on self-determination.

New Jewish Agenda believes that this statement remains significant despite the changing situation in Lebanon since July 2, 1982.

This advertisement is part of a national petition campaign sponsored by New Jewish Agenda.

Yes, I endorse this statement Messrs. Goldmann, Klutznick and Mendes France which calls for mutual recognition between Israel and the Palestinian people.

I am enclosing a tax deductible contribution of $ _____ to support the national petition campaign (checks are payable to New Jewish Agenda).

Mail to:
NEW JEWISH AGENDA
1123 Broadway
Suite 1217
New York, NY 10010

Name (sign) _____

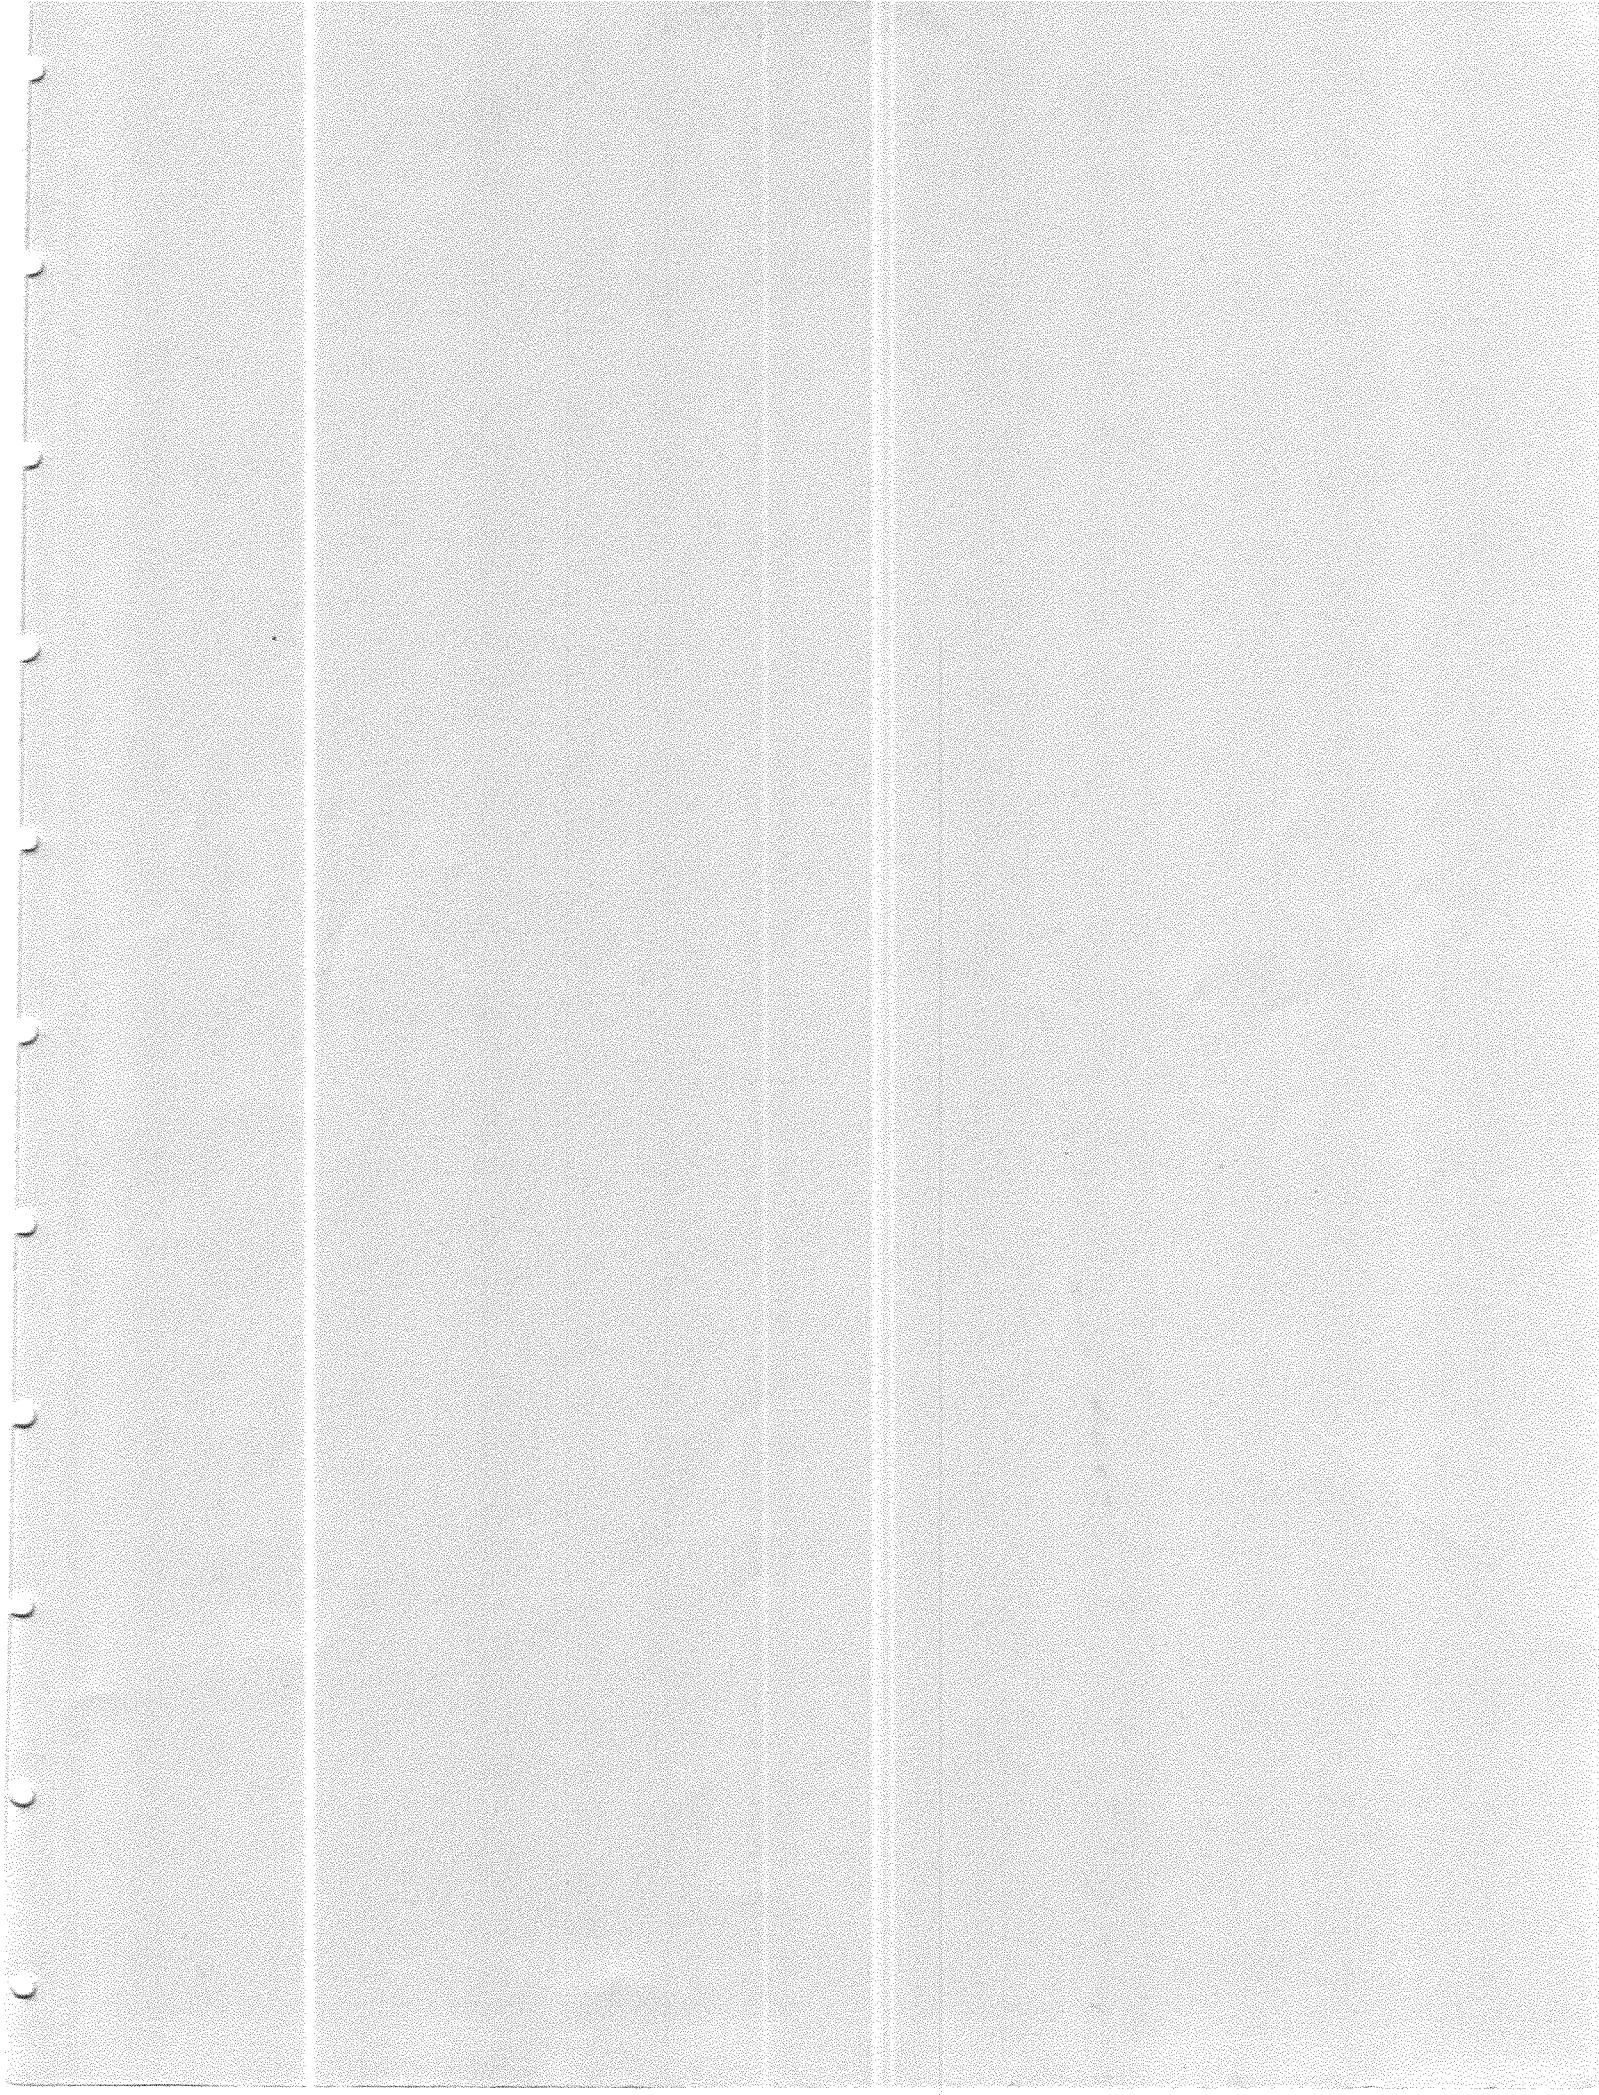

Name (please print) _____

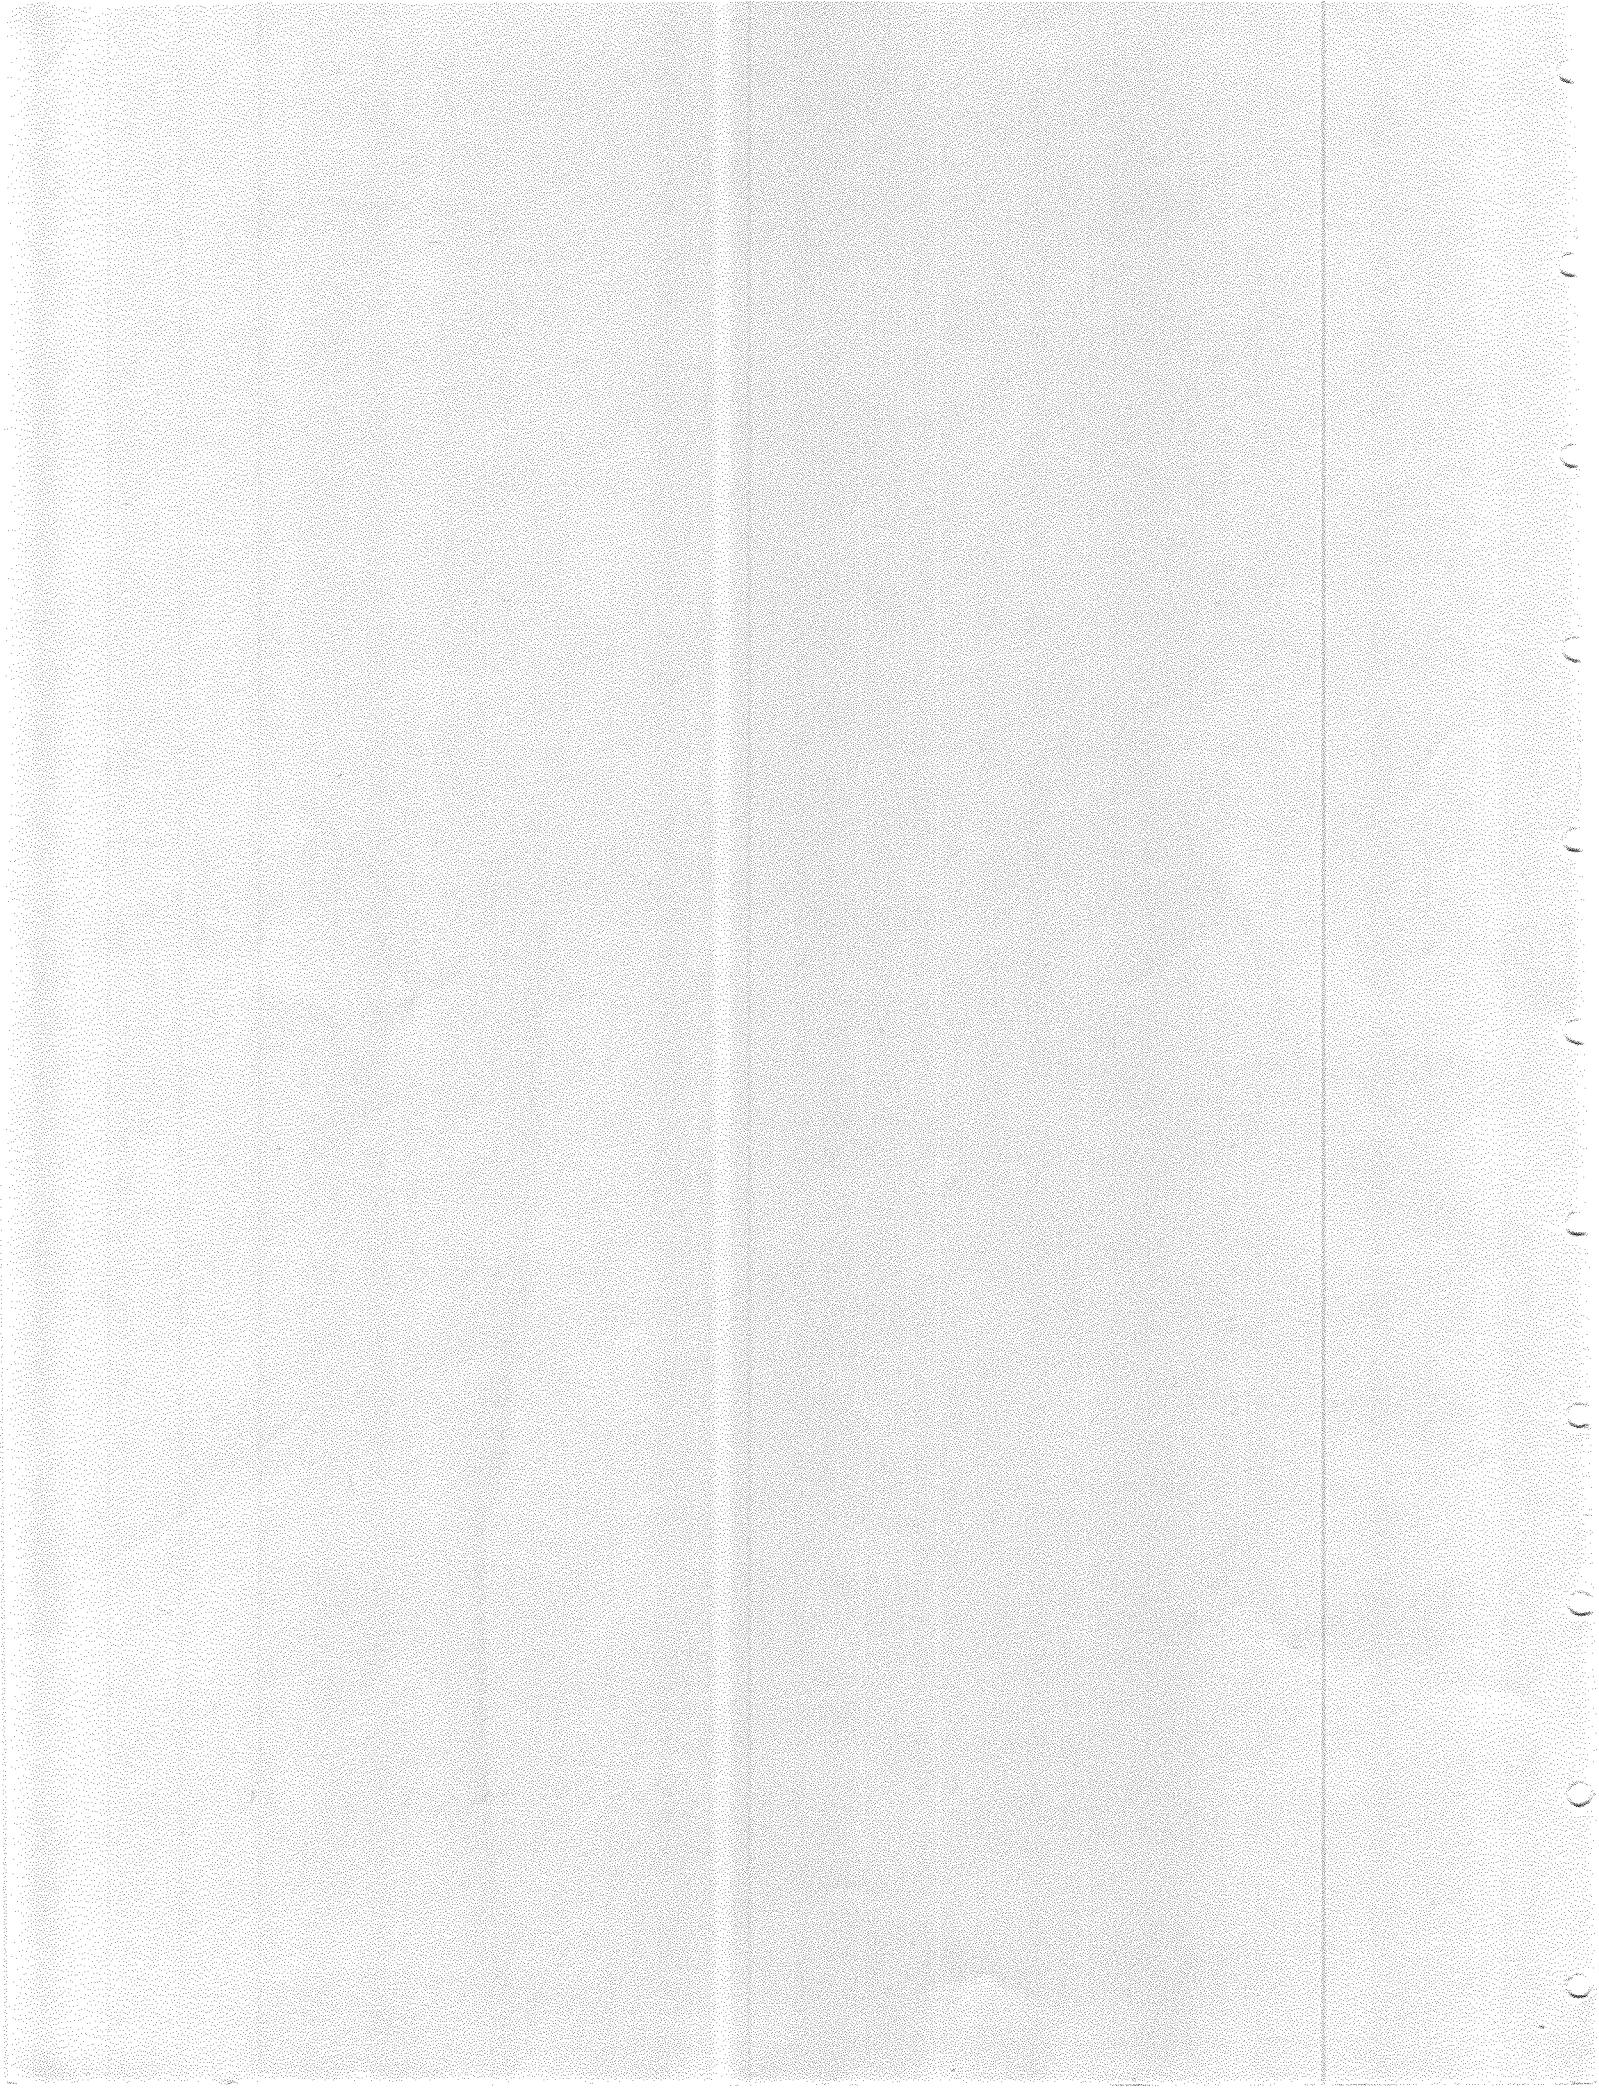

Address _____

City/State/Zip _____

Local Sponsor:
WASHINGTON AREA
NEW JEWISH AGENDA
P.O. Box 43163
Washington, D.C. 20010

New Jewish Agenda is a national organization of Jews from a variety of religious and secular backgrounds, committed to Jewish peoplehood and to fostering a progressive voice on a range of issues, both within the Jewish community and society at large.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

AN INTERNATIONAL DAILY NEWSPAPER

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Monday, June 28, 1982

OPINION AND COMMENTARY

By Philip M. Klutznick

In the immediate aftermath of the 1967 Middle East war, Israel had a unique opportunity to reach an historic accommodation with the Palestinian people. Security Council Resolution 242 pointed the way for a reasonable compromise, but the political creativity and courage was lacking in both Israel and the Arab world. And the Great Powers tracked the precedence and determination to pursue the comprehensive settlement they had helped to perfect.

Ever since 1967 Palestinian nationalism has increased its influence, partly feeding on Israel's occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Today, even with the Palestine Liberation Organization's military defeat in Lebanon, the struggle for Palestinian self-determination will continue and may even be heightened. If the political leadership of the Palestinian movement is destroyed in Beirut, this could have dangerous and unforeseen consequences throughout the Middle East.

It was the Arab scholar Najib Azuri who in 1965 first foresaw that Jewish and Arab nationalist revivals were destined to collide in Palestine. This continuing collision cannot be terminated until both nationalisms accept the legitimacy of the other and the need to reasonably accommodate each other.

With Israel's military action against the Palestinians and others in Lebanon and with its firm grasp on the West Bank, it may seem to some that Israel need no longer contemplate compromise, that Israel's power and American support entitle her to vanquish the Palestinians and defy the Arab world. But if such a view were to prevail, my people may be sacrificing Israel's vital long-term interests to the sins of exhilaration in military victory — the kind of victory which often proves transient.

Israel's moment for compromise

The price Israel and others have had to pay during the past weeks to create Israel's dominant geostrategic situation is truly tragic. For Prime Minister Begin to pronounce these as great days for Israel and for the Jewish people is at best premature and in bad taste considering the great loss of human life.

The only possible justification that can be offered for the misery and death that we have witnessed is that there be a fair offer from today's victor of a just peace between the two peoples who have struggled for so long but must somehow reach reconciliation and coexistence. If there ever was any doubt with whom Israel's is at war, it is now clear it is the Palestinians. If there is to be a peace they will have to make it together.

At this moment of Palestinian weakness, a moment psychologically comparable for them to 1948 and 1967, it is imperative that Jews face the simple truth that it can no longer be reasonably denied that the Palestinian people are entitled to self-determination. When asked in a September, 1980, Louis Harris poll if they felt that "there must be a way to guarantee Israel's security and also give the Palestinians an independent state on the West Bank," 72 percent of the American people responded "Yes" and 59 percent of American Jews concurred. And when asked if they felt that "the Palestinian people are now homeless and deserve their own independent state, just as much as the Jews deserved a homeland after World War II," 71 percent of the general public concurred and a near-majority of American Jews (49 percent) also approved (with 36 percent saying "No" and 15 percent undecided).

The basic issue today is not whether the Palestinians are entitled to their rights, but how to bring this about while ensuring Israel's security and maximizing regional stability. It is urgent that a process of mutual recognition between Israel and the Arab world begin so that serious negotiations can follow and the cycle of violence that has erupted again in Lebanon can be contained.

We must stop the futile, sterile debate whereby the Arab nations challenge the historical validity of Zionism and Jews challenge the political legitimacy of the Palestinian fight for independence. In both camps there are the kernels of mutual recognition between Jewish and Palestinian nationalisms.

Now is the crucial moment for that historic offer of peace coming from the Jewish people to the Palestinian people. Coexistence between Israel, the Palestinians, and Jordan based on mutual recognition of the right to self-determination remains the best possible way of steering Israel toward a secure future in the Arab Middle East. As reported nearly seven years ago in a Brookings Institution study, the urgently required comprehensive peace should have: "provision for Palestinian self-determination, subject to Palestinian acceptance of the sovereignty and integrity of Israel within agreed boundaries. This might take the form either of an independent Palestine state accepting the obligations and commitments of the peace agreements or of a Palestine entity voluntarily federated with Jordan but exercising extensive political autonomy."

A peace imposed by the stronger party of the moment will be transient and breed its own undoing. A peace based on self-determination offers hope that Israel will finally be accepted by her Arab neighbors and hope that the human and national resources of the region can be channeled to bring prosperity and well-being to all the peoples of the area.

Philip M. Klutznick, honorary president of B'nai B'rith International and president emeritus of the World Jewish Congress, was US secretary of commerce during the Carter administration.

America Must Act in the Mideast

We Should Get Israel to Withdraw and Talk—With PLO, Too

By PHILIP M. KLUTZNICK

In Lebanon, as in the Falkland Islands, we are witnessing the triumph of devastation over diplomacy, violence over compassion, emotional despair over political creativity. In neither situation will the military results of the next days determine the core issues that have occasioned these eruptions of humanity's most miserable and persistent disease—warfare.

There can be little debate that Israel's escalation into Lebanon of the decades-old Arab-Israeli conflict threatens much that has been achieved since the Camp David conference in 1978. If today's cycle of hostilities cannot be quickly ended as the U.N. Security Council has unanimously mandated, and the peace process somehow rejuvenated, mankind may again come to experience, this time in the Middle East, the kind of passionate hatreds that eventually lead to total devastation for all parties concerned.

That's why we must now seek with resolute determination a peace process that can reverse today's course and lead to reconciliation and coexistence between Palestinians and Israelis.

America took the initiative at Camp David not solely because we were a trusted interlocutor but because our own vital national interests require political accommodations in that region. That need is all the greater today. If the United States abrogates its responsibility to end the fighting in Lebanon and bring all the adversaries to the negotiating table (as was done in 1973), the Soviet Union will have an opportunity to increase its influence in the region, with incalculable ramifications.

Nearly alone we have become Israel's umbilical cord, and in our unshakable commitment to the welfare of Israel we have sought to promote the kind of just political settlement that is the prerequisite for stable regional relations. What Egypt's visionary President Anwar Sadat began, we wisely nurtured. And Israel, too, came to deeply appreciate the obligations, and willingly paid the price that true peace entails. But all of our previous efforts are now at risk.

At Camp David, the United States accepted the responsibilities of "full partner" in pursuit of a comprehensive peace. We committed ourselves to help bring about "full autonomy" for the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, creating a five-year transition phase that could lead to the fulfillment of "the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people."

It simply can no longer be reasonably denied that the Palestinian people are entitled to self-determination. When asked in a September, 1980, Louis Harris poll if they felt that "there must be a way to guarantee Israel's security and also give the Palestinians an independent state on the West Bank," 72% of the American people responded "Yes" and 59% of American Jews concurred. And when asked if they felt that "the Palestinian people are now homeless and deserve their own independent state, just as much as the Jews deserved a homeland after World War II," 71% of the general public concurred and a near-majority of American Jews (49%) also approved (with 36% saying "No" and 15% undecided).

The basic issue today is not whether the Palestinians are entitled to their rights, but how to bring this about while ensuring Israel's security and maximizing regional stability. It is urgent that a process of mutual recognition between Israel and the Palestinian people begin so that serious negotiations can follow and the cycle of violence that has erupted again in Lebanon can be contained. We must stop the futile, sterile debate whereby Arabs challenge the historical validity of Zionism and Jews challenge the political legitimacy of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Both within Israel and within moderate elements of the PLO are the kernels of mutual recognition between Jewish and Palestinian nationalisms.

And if the stalemated autonomy talks fail to deal adequately with the Palestinian issue, there is no dishonor in supplementing them with the suggestions of others.

In short, the United States is committed to a peaceful resolution of the Arab-Israeli conflict through determined negotiations that will safeguard Israel's security within defined borders, protect important American interests throughout the region, and assure Palestinian rights. Yet time is itself an increasingly assertive enemy of this goal. Today's unfolding warfare in Lebanon is a warning of the fragility of what has so far been accomplished—a warning that should embolden us to act.

It is up to the Reagan Administration to face the realities of the Middle East as boldly as did the Carter Administration. The first step is to halt the conflict in Lebanon immediately and have Israel's forces withdrawn. This must be followed by an enlarged peace process that includes all parties to the conflict—including Palestinians. Only by doing so without apology and with firm determination can America pursue its own best interests, promote Israel's long-term well-being and protect world peace.

Philip M. Klutznick was secretary of Commerce during the Carter Administration, and for decades has been a leading figure in American Jewry.

Facing Mid-East Realities

PHILIP M. KLUTZNICK

Mr. Klutznick is President Emeritus of The World Jewish Congress and Honorary President of B'nai B'rith International. He served as Secretary of Commerce during the final two years of the Carter Administration. During August Mr. Klutznick visited Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Syria, Egypt, Israel and the West Bank.

Since the traumatic AWACs battle a flurry of statements involving the Camp David negotiations and the Saudi Arabian eight-point peace plan, plus King Hussein's visit here, have finally focused the Reagan administration on the intricacies and imperatives of peace in the Middle East. The stalemated Palestinian autonomy talks, the assassination of Anwar Sadat and our own concentration on domestic economic problems come close to sounding the death knell to the Camp David negotiations — beyond the separate Egyptian-Israeli arrangements. Yet there will not be a viable and lasting peace in the Middle East region without the active, constructive and courageous participation of the American government.

During August, in company with several others, I spent three weeks visiting five Middle Eastern countries plus the West Bank. Once again I visited Israel and Egypt. Then for the first time I ventured into new territory, visiting new faces in the West Bank and traveling to Jordan, Syria and Saudi Arabia. In times past I had hesitated to even request visas to these countries. But, after my latest service in the Cabinet of President Carter, I felt it worth the risk to see for myself the new realities I have heard so much about. This laborious introduction is needed to justify the expression of some hopes I feel as well as some fears that disturb me.

The welcome reopening of the autonomy talks and the resurfacing of the Saudi plan are beginning to provide the press with an unfortunate substitute for the AWACs daily features. Yet nothing can be more dangerous to our hopes for peace than forcing the leaders of the governments involved to engage in open clashes about their differences. From my recent talks with senior government officials throughout the Middle East, including a number of heads of state, I know first-hand how many are the disputes and areas of distrust that need be adjusted before a peace can be achieved. These differences and mistrusts are not simply between Israel and her neighbors; but between Arab nations and within Arab nations. The one certainty that I feel is that open and contentious diplomacy in the daily headlines may destroy or long delay the present possibilities for peace between Israel and her Middle Eastern neighbors — a possibility which in my judgment is the greatest since the years preceding Israel's creation in 1948.

Finally the Reagan administration may be putting itself on a constructive course. The U.S. needs to encourage every effort to resolve the genuine and deepseated differences that exist.

A CRUCIAL TURNING-POINT

Looking back, anyone who expected the Camp David Accords to be accepted by all the states in the Middle East was unaware of the sensitivities that were either ignored or shelved for later consideration. Likewise, anyone who now expects the Saudi eight-points to be universally applauded is remiss in appreciating the real facts of life in the region — both in Israel and among parties less thoughtful than the Saudis.

However, the acceptance by Jordan, the PLO and others of the overall Saudi approach may be a crucial turning point in Middle East diplomacy. For the first time certain states have, even if indirectly, turned away from "outlawing" Israel as an illegitimate sovereign state and looked to "coexistence" as the eventual goal. There was a hint of this possibility at the Baghdad summit following the Camp David agreements. But now with the Saudi proposals there is the potential at least for multilateral and direct negotiations involving both Israel and the Palestinians.

Many remember Sadat's trip to Jerusalem and the ecstasy it aroused around the world. Forgotten are the speeches at the Knesset where Sadat and Begin stated positions which were hardly palatable to the other side. It is not easy for political leaders to do a 180-degree turn overnight after years of enmity and hostility. Yet, I recall one of the fine leaders of Israel listening to a critic of Sadat's speech complaining how Sadat was offering little in return for the concessions being demanded of Israel. Yigael Allon responded by reminding the critic that for 30 years Israel asked for recognition and the hand of peace from her Arab neighbors, and now the leader of the most populous Arab state was saying "We had been wrong not to accept you before." "And you get upset about details! Those we will work on and find answers to," Allon insisted.

I feel somewhat the same about the current situation. The eight-point plan was publicized in an interview in August this year while Sadat was visiting Washington. I felt that the timing was significant even though the Crown Prince took special care to emphasize that the Saudis had previously made these points in various ways. Then in the Kingdom, our group hazarded the view in our conferences with leading Saudi officials that perhaps the Saudis were not prepared to take a lead in the peace-making process. But we were assured that such a prospect was unlikely since the Saudis were very circumspect about getting "out front." We were reminded of the Saudi role in the Lebanese cease-fire — careful, behind-the-scene diplomacy. Yet, now the Saudis have taken a significant lead, though essentially tabled at the short-lived Fez summit on November 25th, the Saudi principles remain essential to future Middle East diplomacy.

My visits in the various Arab countries convinced me that with the very few exceptions there was a general feeling at the highest levels that Israel was here to stay, that she had developed into a military superpower, that Jewish nationalism was accepted as fact if not understood, and that the time had finally come to find an answer to the basic problem that stood in the way of peace.

THE PALESTINIAN ISSUE

Over and over again the Palestinian issue dominated conversation and viewpoint. The Palestinians have become a special people in the Arab world, in some ways like the Jews did in the Western world following World War II.

In a sense, Zionism's success spawned another national movement in this century. In Jordan, for instance, no one spoke seriously of the "Jordanian Option" as either viable or desirable. As one leading personality in Jordan self-critically remarked: "The Israelis and Jewish community should have no guilty conscience about the Palestinians; they have been mistreated by the Arab community for many, many, years longer."

Aside from this coalescing of opinions about the centrality of the Palestinian issue to achieving peace, the next most significant conclusion was that the PLO was the only party qualified to speak for the Palestinians. There will be those who will say that such a conclusion is naive or ill-founded. Perhaps so; but it remains a fact that the PLO has sufficient strength in an increasing number of capitals to either accelerate or abort the peace process that was begun so auspiciously in Jerusalem with Sadat's visit 4 years ago this month.

The PLO seems to be increasingly taking a lesson out of Jewish experience. They are trying to create, and with some success, an organization that handles many social and economic problems even as they continue to build a more sophisticated military potential. They have banks and industries and they have friends in the Middle East who help bank them in large sums. Today the Palestinians are spoken of as "the modern-day Jews of the Arab world."

Another widespread conclusion we found was private awareness that while the Camp David Accords might have been a beginning, they were rejected not so much out of unwillingness to contemplate peace but because the agreements failed to properly link the Egyptian-Israeli treaty with resolution of the Palestinian issue. Many condemn Camp David for this, forgetting that without this beginning there probably would not be today's Saudi initiative. Others feel that Camp David has served its function and should be supplemented or transcended.

AN OPENING GAMBIT

It would be tragic and unthinkable to lose the momentum begun at Camp David. The autonomy discussions should now be accelerated in an attempt to draw some Palestinian representation into the negotiations. But if the autonomy talks fail to adequately deal with the Palestinian dimensions of the problem there is no dishonor in supplementing them with the ideas and suggestions of others.

Here the Saudi approach may prove useful, at least as an opening gambit. The Saudi plan is not compatible with Camp David, as President Mubarak in Egypt has suggested, and as the Reagan administration has implied. Some of the ideas in the plan are in some ways an outgrowth of the events of the past few years. If endorsed at the Arab Summit at Fez later this month, American, Israeli and Egyptian negotiators should carefully consider the virtues of enlarging the participation in the peace process. Such a development was, in fact, envisioned at Camp David. In recent discussions with President Carter I found him very much inclined to this possibility.

For while it is indispensable to an earnest and honest solution in the Middle East that the U.S. continue to play a key role, it is also necessary that Saudi Arabia and other constructive Arab states enter the peace process and that the Europeans be encouraged to participate in accordance with their legitimate interests. The U.S. should not want to have a monopoly on peace-making in the Middle East.

Since the position and status of Saudi Arabia may be crucial to the eventual success of Middle East diplomacy, let me make a few additional observations. I knew the representatives of Saudi Arabia when I served in the United Nations in the mid-1950's and again in the 1960's. They were represented in the main by mercenaries who were not really native Saudis nor polished diplomats. Energy economics and 20 years have transformed the Saudi situation. The accomplishments which oil billions have made possible are impressive. Yet the ruling family, it appears to me, senses that many more changes need to be made. Many of the younger people who are not a part of the family have a degree of competence that is unlike that which seemed to prevail but a few years ago.

No one can tell at this stage what will be the Saudi future, but to ignore the changes, the resources, and the leadership which circumstances have imposed on Saudi Arabia is to think of yesterday and not today and tomorrow. In my dealings outside the Kingdom with representatives of the Saudi monarchy and with Saudi private businessmen I have found a metamorphosis which is difficult to appreciate unless one experiences it. Comparing Saudi Arabia with Iran under the Shah is unrealistic. In fact there is little comparison to Saudi Arabia today or probably in history — the country is sui generis. Nor do I find the measure of alleged Saudi arrogance many others attach to the Kingdom. In its place there actually seems to be a kind of modesty accompanied by serious anxiety about the unknown future.

Any unprejudiced observer would have to conclude that Saudi influence has been used for some time in opposition to Israel's hopes. Yet, in the past few years the Saudis have begun to quickly mature. I am forced to conclude that no genuine and lasting peace will be achieved anytime soon without some real measure of participation by the Saudi Kingdom. I do not believe that it is simply the hope within me that causes me to conclude that the leaders of the

Continued on p. 65

At the ceremony of the Kreisky Prize awards in Vienna with Chancellor Kreisky. Among the recipients: Raymonda Tawil and Simha Flapan.

Speech by S. Flapan Continued from p. 9
Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza leads to an erosion of these values, to the deterioration of Jewish-Arab relations, to the growing isolation of Israel in world public opinion and to the spread of the propaganda equating Zionism with Racism.

Only under conditions of mutual recognition of national rights and peaceful co-existence in the country, which is for both peoples a homeland and a base, can the humanistic and socialistic values of Zionism survive. Such a solution is possible only through a dramatic change of attitudes, from non-recognition to mutual recognition, from terrorism and military reprisals to talks and negotiations that would lead to the end of occupation and to Palestinian self-determination in the framework of peace and co-existence.

This requires great and persistent efforts and the active involvement of international public opinion. I deeply appreciate Dr. Bruno Kreisky's Stiftung in their initiative to encourage these efforts. The prizes awarded in the past to Arye Eliav and Dr. Issam Sartawi and today to Mrs. Raymonda Tawil and myself are serving one of humanity's most urgent and important causes.

*Facing Mid-East Realities
Continued from p. 28*

Kingdom may be signaling their readiness to become involved in a peace process building upon Camp David but going beyond it.

If this conclusion is correct, or even if the conjecture has possibilities, then it should be explored by both the U.S. and Israel. Inflammatory rhetoric should be replaced by thoughtful contemplation. Such possibilities should not be conceived as substitutes for Camp David, nor should we assume that the autonomy negotiations will lead nowhere. What is necessary is to transcend and build on the remarkable progress that Camp David has made possible. For we are at a moment in the modern history of the Middle East which may be mid-stream between the beginnings of a limited peace and the achievement of a comprehensive peace. If we fail to grasp that moment and encourage active and diligent negotiations quietly conducted toward that larger end, then all of us may reap the whirlwinds of the far bleaker alternatives.

Open Support – Continued from p. 50
for the Law, though did not deem it necessary to prepare the Jewish leadership, or make it aware of its intentions.

Jewish leadership is worried about the current low in the relations between Israel and the U.S. The Presidents' Conference, in spite of its criticism of Mr Begin and his policy, decided to open a wide propaganda campaign against Washington's position. Said Mr. Hellman, Managing Director of the Presidents' Conference, "We are not ready to agree with the punitive and hysterical policy of the administration towards Israel, as manifest over the last six months." Mr. Hellman added, "President Carter tried to split the Jewish leadership. He recruited Jews who stood up — and not only once — against the Jewish establishment and against Israel. In the Reagan administration the story is different. They are hysterical and we don't know what they want. But the important thing is that the Jewish leadership is now united, and ready for one of the most difficult and fateful struggles that it ever led against an American administration."

The best chance peace has ever had

by Philip M. Klutznick

Since the traumatic Awacs battle a flurry of statements involving the Camp David negotiations and the Saudi Arabian eight-point peace plan, plus King Hussein's visit to Washington, have finally focused the Reagan administration's attention on the intricacies and imperatives of peace in the Middle East. The stalemated Palestinian autonomy talks, the assassination of Anwar Sadat and our own concentration on domestic economic problems come close to sounding the death knell of the Camp David negotiations — beyond the separate Egyptian-Israeli arrangements. Yet there will not be a viable and lasting peace in the Middle East region without the active, constructive and courageous participation of the American government.

The welcome reopening of the autonomy talks and the resurfacing of the Saudi plan are beginning to provide the press with an unfortunate substitute for the Awacs daily features. Yet nothing can be more dangerous to our hopes for peace than forcing the leaders of the governments involved to engage in open clashes about their differences. From my recent talks with senior government officials throughout the Middle East, including a number of heads of state (I visited Israel and Egypt and, for the first time, the West Bank, Jordan, Syria and Saudi Arabia), I know first-hand how many are the disputes and areas of distrust that need be adjusted before a peace can be achieved. These differences and mistrusts are not simply between Israel and her neighbours; but between Arab nations and within Arab nations. The one certainty that I feel is that open and contentious diplomacy in the daily headlines may destroy or long delay the present possibilities for peace between Israel and her Middle Eastern neighbours — a possibility which in my judgement is the greatest since the years preceding Israel's creation in 1948. At last the Reagan administration may be putting itself on a constructive course. The US needs to encourage every effort to resolve the genuine and deep-seated differences that exist.

Looking back, anyone who expected the Camp David accords to be accepted by the states in the Middle East was unaware of the sensitivities that were either ignored or shelved for later consideration. Likewise, anyone who expected the Saudi eight points to be universally applauded did not appreciate the real facts of life in the region — both in Israel and among parties less thoughtful than the Saudis. However, the acceptance by Jordan and others, and indeed by some PLO leaders, of the overall Saudi approach may be a crucial turning point in Middle East diplomacy. For the first time certain states have, even if indirectly, turned away from "outlawing" Israel as an illegitimate sovereign state and looked to "coexistence" as the eventual goal. There was a hint of this possibility at the Baghdad summit following the Camp David agreements. But now with the Saudi proposals there is the potential at least for multilateral and direct negotiations involving both Israel and the Palestinians.

Many remember Sadat's trip to Jerusalem and the ecstasy it aroused around the world. Forgotten are the speeches in the Knesset where Sadat and Begin stated positions which were hardly palatable to the other side. It is not easy for political leaders to do a 180-degree turn overnight after years of enmity and hostility. Yet, I recall one of the fine leaders of Israel listening to a critic of Sadat's speech complaining how Sadat was offering little in return for the concessions being demanded of Israel. Yigael Allon responded by reminding the critic that for 30 years Israel asked for recognition and the hand of peace from her Arab neighbours, and now the leader of the most populous Arab state was saying "We have been wrong not to accept you before." "And you get upset about details! Those we will work on and find answers," Allon insisted.

I feel somewhat the same about the current situation. The eight-point plan was publicised in an interview in August this year while Sadat was visiting Washington. I felt that the timing was significant even though the crown prince took special care to emphasise that the Saudis had previously made these points in various ways. While in the kingdom, our group hazarded the view in our conferences with leading Saudi officials that perhaps the Saudis were not prepared to take a lead in the peace-making process. But we were assured that such a prospect was unlikely since the Saudis were very circumspect about getting "out front". We were reminded of the Saudi role in the Lebanese cease-fire — careful, behind-the-scenes diplomacy. Yet now the Saudis have taken a significant lead. Their proposals were tabled at the short-lived summit at Fez on 25 November and although no agreement was reached the principles on which they were based are essential to the ensuing diplomatic process.

A special people

My visits to the various Arab countries convinced me that with very few exceptions there was a general feeling in the highest circles that Israel was here to stay, that it had developed into a military superpower, that Jewish nationalism was accepted as fact — if not understood — and that the time had finally come to find an answer to the basic problem that stood in the way of peace. Over and over again the Palestinian issue dominated conversation and viewpoint. The Palestinians have become a special people in the Arab world, in some ways like the Jews in the Western world following the second world war.

Apart from this coalescing of opinions about the centrality of the Palestinian issue to achieving peace, the next most significant conclusion was that the PLO was the only party qualified to speak for the Palestinians. There will be those who will say that such a conclusion is naive or ill-founded. Perhaps so; but it remains a fact that the PLO has sufficient clout in an increasing number of capitals to either accelerate or abort the peace process that was begun so auspiciously in Jerusalem with Sadat's visit four years ago. The PLO seems to be increasingly taking a lesson out of Jewish experience. The Palestinians are trying to create, and with some success, an organisation that handles many social and economic problems even as they continue to build a more sophisticated military potential. They have banks and industries and they have friends in the Middle East who back them with large sums. Today the Palestinians are spoken of as "the modern-day Jews of the Arab world".

We also found an awareness that the Camp David accords might have been a beginning, but that they were rejected not so much out of unwillingness to contemplate peace but because the agreements failed to link the Egyptian-Israeli treaty with the resolution of the Palestinian issue. Many condemn Camp David for this, forgetting that without this beginning there probably would not have been any Saudi initiative. Others feel that Camp David has served its function and should now be supplemented or transcended. It would be tragic and unthinkable to lose the momentum begun at Camp David. The autonomy discussions should now be accelerated in an attempt to draw some Palestinian representation into the negotiations. But if the autonomy talks fail to deal adequately with the Palestinian dimensions of the problem there is no dishonour in supplementing them with the ideas and suggestions of others.

No monopoly on peace-making

Here the Saudi approach may prove useful, at least as an opening gambit. The Saudi plan is not incompatible with Camp David, as President Mubarak in Egypt has suggested and as the Reagan administration has implied. Some of the ideas in the plan are in some ways an outgrowth of the events of the past few years. Although the plan was not endorsed at Fez, American, Israeli and Egyptian negotiators should carefully consider the virtues of seeking wider participation in the peace process after April 1982. Such a development was, in fact, envisioned at Camp David. In recent discussions with Mr Jimmy Carter I found him very much inclined to this possibility. For while it is indispensable to an earnest and honest solution in the Middle East that the US continue to play a key role, it is also necessary that Saudi Arabia and other constructive Arab states enter the peace process and that the Europeans be encouraged to participate in accordance with their legitimate interests. The US should not want to have a monopoly on peace-making in the Middle East.

Any unprejudiced observer would have to conclude that Saudi influence has been used for some time in opposition to Israel's hopes. Yet in the past few years the Saudis have begun to mature quickly. I am forced to conclude that no genuine and lasting peace will be achieved in the near future without some real measure of participation by the Saudi kingdom. I do not believe that it is simply the hope within me that causes me to conclude that the leaders of the kingdom may be signalling their readiness to become involved in a peace process, building upon Camp David but going beyond it.

If this conclusion is correct, or even if the conjecture has possibilities, then it should be explored by both the US and Israel. Inflammatory rhetoric should be replaced by thoughtful contemplation. Such possibilities should not be conceived as substitutes for Camp David, nor should we assume that the autonomy negotiations will lead nowhere. What is necessary is to transcend and build on a moment in the modern history of the Middle East which may be mid-stream between the beginnings of a limited peace and the achievement of a comprehensive peace. If we fail to grasp that moment and encourage active and diligent negotiations quietly conducted toward that larger end, then all of us may reap the whirlwinds of the far bleaker alternatives.

Mr Klutznick is president emeritus of The World Jewish Congress and honorary president of B'nai B'rith International. He served as secretary of commerce during the last two years of the Carter administration.

The Saudis, Camp David and Peace

By Philip M. Klutznik

The writer was secretary of commerce in the Carter administration and is president emeritus of the World Jewish Congress and honorary president of B'nai B'rith International. He wrote this article for The Washington Post.

WASHINGTON — Not since Israel's creation in 1948, in my judgment, has there been a greater possibility of achieving peace between Israel, the Palestinians and Israel's Arab neighbors.

Looking back, anyone who expected the Camp David accords to be accepted by all the states in the Middle East was unaware of the sensitivities that were either ignored or shelved for later consideration. Likewise, anyone who now expects the Saudis' eight points to be universally applauded is remiss in not appreciating the real facts of life in the region — both in Israel and among parties less thoughtful than the Saudis.

However, the acceptance by Jordan, the PLO and others of the overall approach embodied in the Saudi eight-point "peace plan" may be a crucial turning point. For the first time, even if indirectly, important Arab parties have turned away from "outlawing" Israel as an illegitimate entity and have looked to negotiations with recognition and "coexistence" as the eventual goal.

Many have forgotten the extreme differences between the speeches Anwar Sadat and Menachem Begin made to the Knesset — differences that thoughtful negotiations helped resolve.

I feel somewhat the same about the current situation. The Saudis have taken a significant lead and will be attempting at the Arab summit in Fez later this month to achieve an Arab consensus. The importance of these developments must not be missed. My visit in August to a number of Arab countries, including Saudi Arabia, convinced me that with very few exceptions there was a general feeling at the highest levels that Israel was here to stay, that it had developed into a military superpower, that Jewish nationalism was accepted as fact, if not understood, and that the time had finally come to find an answer to the basic problem that stood in the way of a comprehensive peace.

Over and over, the Palestinian issue dominated conversation and viewpoints. The Palestinians have become a special people in the Arab world, in some ways like the Jews were in the West after World War II.

The next most significant conclusion was that the PLO was the only party qualified to speak for the Palestinians. There will be those who will say that such a conclusion is naive or ill-founded. Perhaps so; but it remains a fact that the PLO has sufficient strength in an increasing number of capitals to either accelerate or abort the peace process that started with Sadat's Jerusalem visit.

The PLO members are trying to create, and with some success, an organization that handles many social and economic problems, even as they continue to build a more sophisticated military potential. They are spoken of as "the modern-day Jews of the Arab world."

I found that the Camp David accords were rejected not so much because of unwillingness to contemplate peace with Israel as because they failed to link properly the Egyptian-Israeli treaty with resolution of the Palestinian issue. Many condemn Camp David for this, forgetting that without this beginning there probably would not be today's Saudi initiative. Others feel that Camp David has served its function and should now be supplemented or transcended.

It would be tragic to lose the momentum begun at Camp David. The autonomy discussions should now be accelerated in an attempt to draw Palestinian representation into the negotiations. But if the autonomy talks fail to deal adequately with the Palestinian issue, there is no dishonor in supplementing them with the suggestions of others. Here the Saudi approach may prove useful. As President Hosni Mubarak in Egypt has suggested, and as the Reagan administration has implied, the Saudi ideas are not incompatible with the peace process. Enlarging participation in the process was, in fact, envisioned at Camp David.

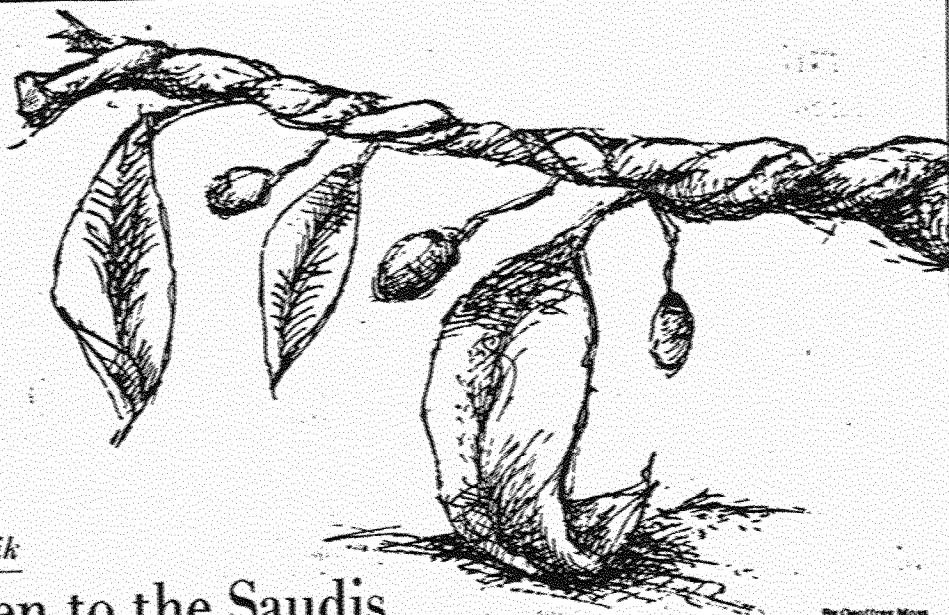

LONDON, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1981

I knew the representatives of Saudi Arabia in the United Nations in the mid-1950s and 1960s. They were in the main mercenaries who were not always native Saudis or polished diplomats. Energy economics and 20 years have transformed the Saudi situation. Yet the ruling family, it appears, senses that many more changes need to be made.

In my contacts outside the kingdom with representatives of the Saudi monarchy and with Saudi private businessmen, I have not found the alleged arrogance of which some others complain. There actually seems to be a kind of modesty, accompanied by serious anxiety about the unknown future.

Comparing Saudi Arabia with Iran under the shah is unrealistic. In fact, there is little comparison to Saudi Arabia today or probably in history. The country is sui generis. I conclude that no genuine peace will be achieved any time soon without some real measure of Saudi participation. If this conclusion is correct, or even if the conjecture has possibilities, then it should be explored by both the United States and Israel. We need to build on the progress Camp David made possible. We may be mainstream between the beginning of a limited peace and the achievement of a comprehensive peace.

Philip M. Klutznik

Let's Listen to the Saudis

Not since Israel's creation in 1948, in my judgment, has there been a greater possibility of achieving peace between Israel, the Palestinians and its Arab neighbors.

Looking back, anyone who expected the Camp David accords to be accepted by all the states in the Middle East was unaware of the sensitivities that were either ignored or purposely shelved for later consideration. Likewise, anyone who now expects the Saudis' eight points to be universally applauded is remiss in not appreciating the real facts of life in the region—both in Israel and among parties less thoughtful than the Saudis.

However, the acceptance by Jordan, the PLO and others of the overall approach embodied in the Saudi eight-point "peace plan" may be a crucial turning point. For the first time, even if indirectly, important Arab parties have turned away from "outlawing" Israel as an illegitimate entity and have looked to negotiations with recognition and "coexistence" as the eventual goal.

Many have forgotten the extreme difference between the speeches Anwar Sadat and Menachem Begin made to the Knesset—differences that thoughtful negotiations helped resolve.

I feel somewhat the same about the current situation. The Saudis have taken a significant lead and will be attempting at the Arab summit in Fez later this month to achieve an Arab consensus. The importance of these developments must not be missed.

My visit in August to a number of Arab countries, including Saudi Arabia, convinced me that with very few exceptions there was a general feeling at the highest levels that Israel was here to stay, that it had developed into a military superpower, that Jewish nationalism was accepted as fact if not understood, and that the time had finally come to find an answer to the basic problem that stood in the way of a comprehensive peace.

Over and over, the Palestinian issue dominated conversation and viewpoints. The Palestinians

"No genuine peace will be achieved anytime soon without some real measure of Saudi participation."

have become a special people in the Arab world, in some ways like the Jews were in the West following World War II.

The next most significant conclusion was that the PLO was the only party qualified to speak for the Palestinians. There will be those who will say that such a conclusion is naive or ill-founded. Perhaps so; but it remains a fact that the PLO has sufficient strength in an increasing number of capitals to either accelerate or abort the peace process that was begun four years ago with Sadat's Jerusalem visit.

The PLO members are trying to create, and with some success, an organization that handles many social and economic problems, even as they continue to build a more sophisticated military potential. They are spoken of as "the modern-day Jews of the Arab world."

I found that the Camp David accords were rejected not so much because of unwillingness to contemplate peace with Israel as because they failed to link properly the Egyptian-Israeli treaty with resolution of the Palestinian issue. Many condemn Camp David for this, forgetting that without this beginning there probably would not be today's Saudi initiative. Others feel that Camp David has served its function and should now be supplemented or transcended.

It would be tragic and unthinkable to lose the momentum begun at Camp David. The autonomy discussions should now be accelerated in an attempt to draw Palestinian representation into the negotiations. But if the autonomy talks fail to deal adequately with the Palestinian issue, there is no dishonor in supplementing them with the suggestions of others.

Here the Saudi approach may prove useful. As President Hosni Mubarak in Egypt has suggested, and as the Reagan administration has implied, the Saudi ideas are not incompatible with the peace process. Ensuring participation in the process was, in fact, envisioned at Camp David.

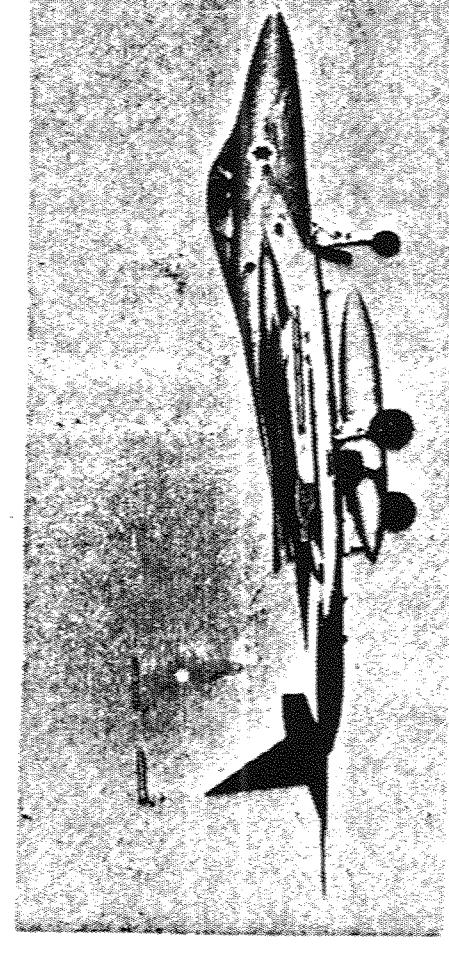

I knew the representatives of Saudi Arabia in the United Nations in the mid-1950s and 1960s. They were in the main mercenaries who were not always native Saudis or polished diplomats. Energy economics and 20 years have transformed the Saudi situation. Yet the ruling family, it appears to me, senses that many more changes need to be made. In my contacts outside the kingdom with representatives of the Saudi monarchy and with Saudi private businessmen, I have not found the alleged arrogance of which some others complain. There actually seems to be a kind of modesty accompanied by serious anxiety about the unknown future. Comparing Saudi Arabia with Iran under the shah is unrealistic. In fact, there is little comparison to Saudi Arabia today or probably in history—the country is sui generis.

I conclude that no genuine peace will be achieved anytime soon without some real measure of Saudi participation. If this conclusion is correct, or even if the conjecture has possibilities, then it should be explored by both the United States and Israel. We need to build on the progress Camp David made possible. We may be mid-stream between the beginning of a limited peace and the achievement of a comprehensive peace.

The writer was secretary of commerce in the Carter administration and is president emeritus of the World Jewish Congress and honorary president of B'nai Brith International.

Israel's raid as a warning symptom

Any act using military power by one nation against another in these days of a perilously overarmed universe can hardly be cause for celebration. Generally the nation that undertakes such action, claiming it was done to avoid impending danger to its own security, is entitled to have its case fairly examined by public opinion. Yet one cannot escape admitting that the burden of proof is on the nation that acts.

Unfortunately, nearly all of us who react lack the intimate knowledge on which Israel acted in bombing Iraq's nuclear reactor; nor do we Americans possess the full information on which our government has decided to temporarily suspend additional F-16 deliveries to Israel. Furthermore, it would be unnatural for me as an American Jew not to hope that Israel was justified in its action and will satisfactorily meet its burden of proof. Still, I feel I must raise certain questions and thoughts which beg for answers especially as they come from agonizing friends, not enemies, of the Jewish state:

• In the short run, what damage has been done to presidential envoy Philip Habib's peace mission to the Middle East, and was the timing of Israel's strike unavoidable? In respect, American diplomacy had forestalled an impending military confrontation between Israel and Syria and further raised hopes for a possible resolution of the Lebanese situation. Why did Israel act at this time and without consultations with the United States, thus endangering present regional peace while claiming to safeguard Israeli security in years ahead?

• Was the timing of the Baghdad raid inspired by Israel's June 30 election as seems to be the case? Even if the Israeli position of acting in self-defense is accepted, could not the action have been delayed just a few weeks, long enough to avoid tarnishing it with the suspicion that it was — even partially — an election ploy?

• Most imperative in the short run is the effect this act might have on Egyptian-Israeli relations, especially in light of the Sadat-Begin meeting held but days before the strike into Iraq. Camp David and Egypt are the only peace games in the Middle East. Anything that diminishes the political strength of Egypt or the significance of Camp David makes more consequential peace initiatives in the area far more difficult. Instead of increasing the prospects for true Israeli security, do not such actions reduce security by threatening regional stability, inflaming passions, and by further isolating both Egypt and Israel?

• Finally, what of the problems created for Israel's most reliable national friend, the US? The Reagan administration's frequently avowed regard for Israel as a "strategic asset" is already disturbed by the AWACS issue and now will face internal decisions and United Nations problems not easily reconcilable to the satisfaction of either Israel or the US. Having accepted an arms dependency relationship with the US, can Israel reasonably insist on taking actions unacceptable and unexplainable to many and which threaten American regional interests?

Yet the short-run problems will fade, leaving scars that are currently unpredictable. The greater fears that deeply concern me are the long-term implications for world order of Israel's action. There will be a never-ending difference between Israel and her acknowledged national enemies as to whether or not the act was justified in international law and usage as self-defense. Yet, looked at beyond the politics of the moment, and even accepting the Israeli claim of Iraqi intentions, there remain certain fundamental and gnawing questions which go to the heart of the Camp David peace process and to the basis of today's international society.

A rather ominous precedent has now been set. What is "sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." Tomorrow, Iraq or some other unfriendly nation can indulge in a "suicide mission" on Israel's Dimona reactor, or India can turn on Pakistan, the Soviet Union on China. Israel has totally avoided this discussion as if only Israel's interests are vital, only Israel's existence threatened. Yet, in effect, Israel has breached the long and worrisome efforts to secure a measure of restraint in the nuclear age, with Israel's unilateral act creating a sense of anarchy and permissiveness hitherto beyond acceptability.

The Israeli government along with a number of friendly American commentators have compared Israel's action with the proposed action of the US during the Cuban missile crisis — even though the Americans followed a diplomatic course and avoided military action.

I was an ambassador on the American delegation at the UN in those days. And I remember vividly the painful week through which Ambassador Stevenson and other top government officials passed debating what steps the US should take. The tension of a possible nuclear war was not easy for anyone to contemplate. The President, who doubtless favored a "surgical strike" if necessary, rightly decided to give the Soviets and the Cubans a way to step back. I was in the Security Council when Stevenson, in uncharacteristically tartid language, used the now historic phrase that he "would wait for an answer [from the USSR] until hell freezes over!" I can never forget the horror of that week, nor the sense of relief when the crisis evaporated.

Anyone who lived through those days cannot be overjoyed by this latest development, no matter how necessary it may have appeared to be to some. For now the devil of preemptive attack has been loosed — all the worse for Israel having acted without clearly exhausting all opportunities for reaching general peace in the region, which is surely the only way in the long term to safeguard Israel's security.

Without strenuous efforts in pursuit of a comprehensive Middle East peace structure on the foundation of the Camp David understandings, Israel's action may well stimulate rather than retard a highly destabilizing arms race. Just a decade ago Israel bombed near Cairo had that very result. Today, such a new regional arms race might well go beyond conventional weapons.

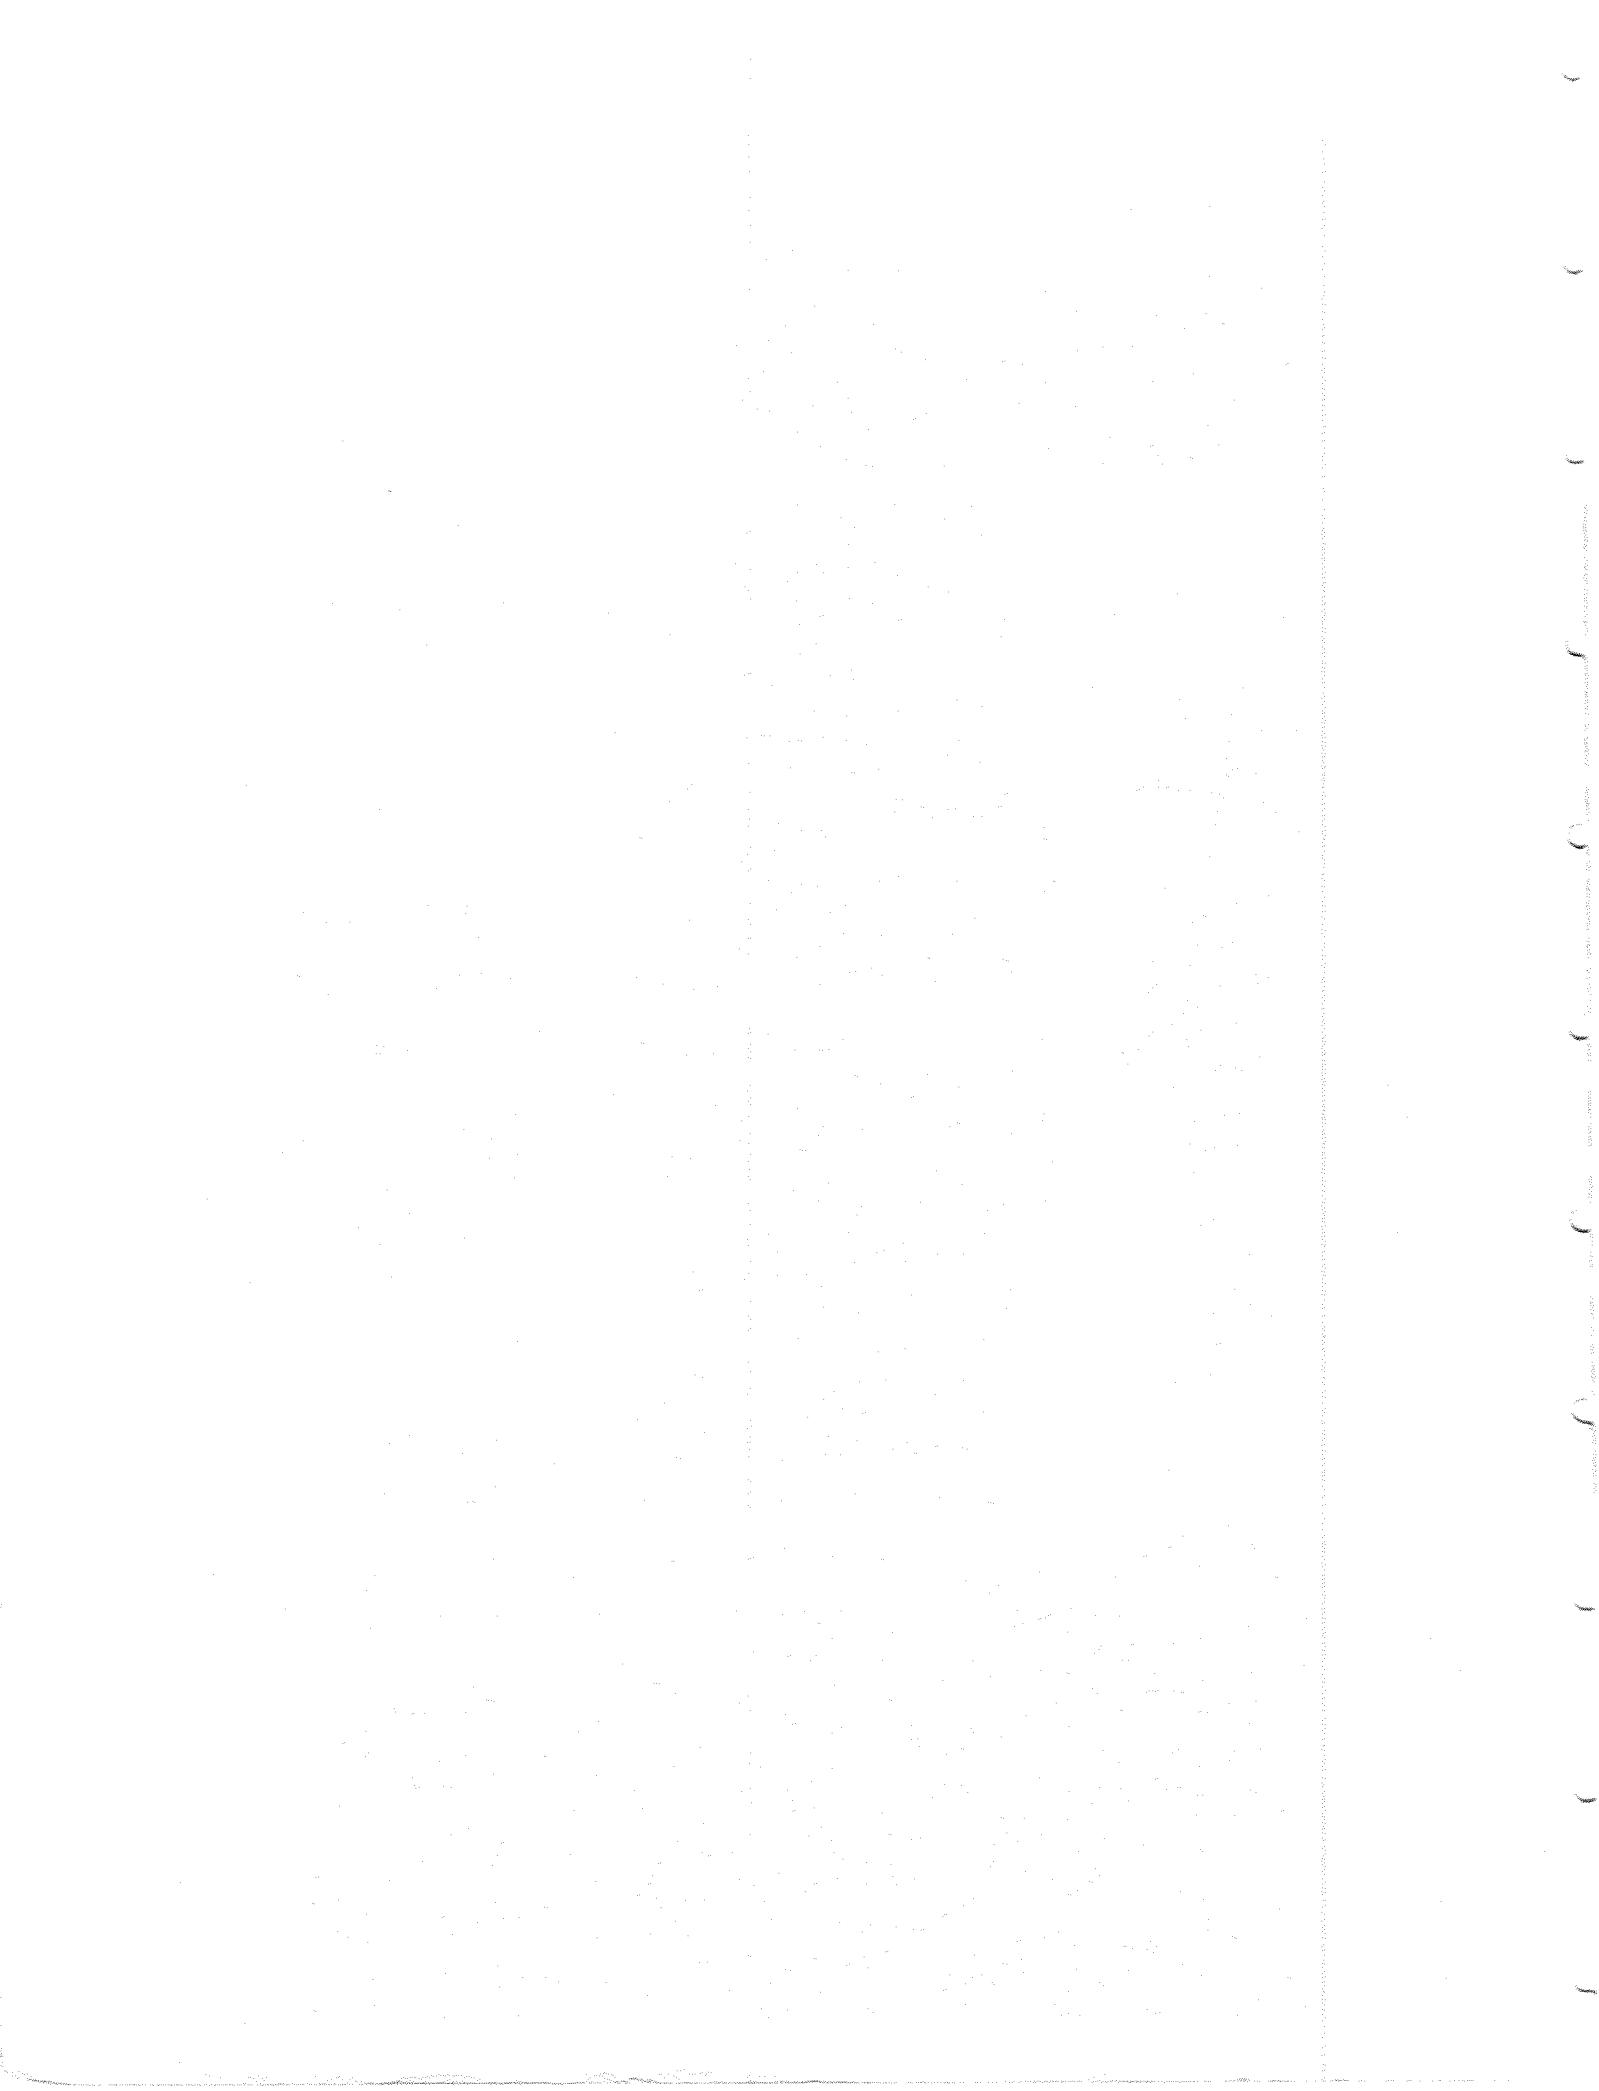

But the greatest lesson that can be drawn from these events is that the world rests on the edge of a nuclear precipice. Whether it is between the superpowers or in the regional context in Asia or the Middle East, one single bomb of today's sophistication could unleash a holocaust for mankind. The great powers under a powerful nuclear sword of Damocles now Israel has struck out against the potential of facing a similar reality.

It behooves the superpowers to get on with serious arms limitations talks and, together with other nations on the verge of nuclear abilities, to develop a foolproof "fail safe" political and security program to protect us from our own rashness. Proclaiming "holy wars" or threatening use of nuclear weapons — two events which clearly precipitated Israel's action — hardly encourage restraint. But without superpower leadership, regional actors are encouraged to act irresponsibly. Consequently George Kellman's recent call for "a bold and sweeping departure" from our present collision course through a quickly negotiated bilateral reduction in nuclear weapons deserves profound contemplation.

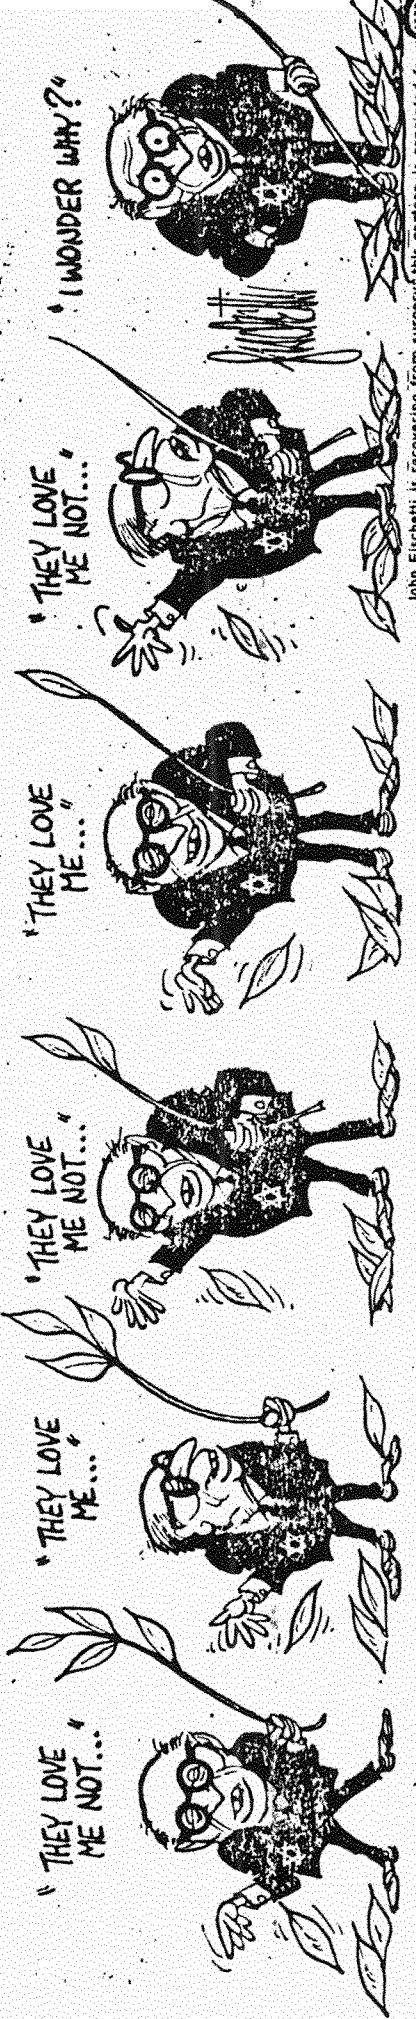

For Israel's action is but a symptom of the threat to which we are all ominously exposed. We are caught under a nuclear burden and have yet to discover a way to remove or even lighten it.

Philip M. Klutznick, secretary of commerce in the final years of the Carter presidency, has served under every Democratic president since Franklin Roosevelt. He has also served as president of B'nai B'rith International and the World Jewish Congress.

By Philip M. Klutznick

John Fischetti

John Fischetti is Recovering from surgery; this cartoon is reprinted from 1978.

It's time for America's Jews to take stock

Personal view/Philip M. Klutnick

RECENT political events have created an uneasiness within the American Jewish community. There's no simple prescription to cure it.

The catalysts for today's tensions are well-known. And the Jewish response, on the whole, has been public confrontation and forceful advocacy with both the black community and the Carter administration. These developments, it seems to me, necessitate for the Jewish community in this country a time for self-evaluation, for taking stock, for rethinking.

Having been involved in many related controversies for some decades while holding numerous positions of leadership within American Jewry, I feel the responsibility to contribute to a constructive discussion of three central topics on today's national agenda: black-Jewish relations, the political involvement of organized American Jewry and the nagging but inescapable Palestinian problem.

THAT BLACKS AND JEWS have sustained a fundamental alliance based on shared commitments to human rights and political freedoms is a historical fact. Today, our problems seem more attitudinal than real. Some Jewish leaders may have overreacted to the Andrew Young situation just as some black leaders may have been too quick in allowing a transient incident to upset ties built throughout this century.

The black community is undergoing its own internal struggle for leadership and direction. And I hope the outcome will be a renewed desire to re-establish the black-Jewish alliance in order to confront social and political problems still facing both groups. There will continue to be differences; our communities have suffered different historical wrongs and, in all candidness, there are now some differing perspectives partly based on class and economic interests. Yet the 'underpinnings for our continued co-operation and partnership remain firm. And a greater measure of sensitivity by both groups will help overcome emotionalized political disputes that tend to create dangerous schisms rather than fruitful exchanges of views.

AS FOR THE JEWISH COMMUNITY, I fear that under the strains of contemporary developments we may have lost touch with some of our longer-term objectives.

Our umbrella political organizations, for instance, were originally built as mechanisms through which Jewish leadership could discuss important matters with top officials of our government in the most productive and efficient manner. Unfortunately, there has been a tendency for some Jewish leaders to move away from careful discourse toward public posturing. Press releases have too often replaced quiet discussion of complex issues. As a community within the broader American polity, we have properly attempted to present our views forcefully on matters of special concern. Yet, at times, views forceably on matters of special concern. Yet, at times, especially of late, our perspectives have been excessively narrow, our voices overly shrill, our tactics unnecessarily harsh. The Palestinian question is a serious roadblock to fulfilling the promise inherent in the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty. Thus the magnitude of the issues at stake warrants a broad dialog on where we go from here. Whether the organization known as the Palestine Liberation Organization has a central role to play at this time in Middle East negotiations is not, for me, the decisive question. Numerous ways can be found to include representative Palestinian groups at the appropriate time once the political stage is properly set.

TOO MANY FALSE STARTS and too many unproductive international conferences have characterized efforts to bring Jews and Palestinian Arabs to an acceptable compromise. All too often the core problems have been neglected or set aside as a panoply of self-seeking groups and individuals have attempted to capture the spotlight by latching on to politically expedient side issues.

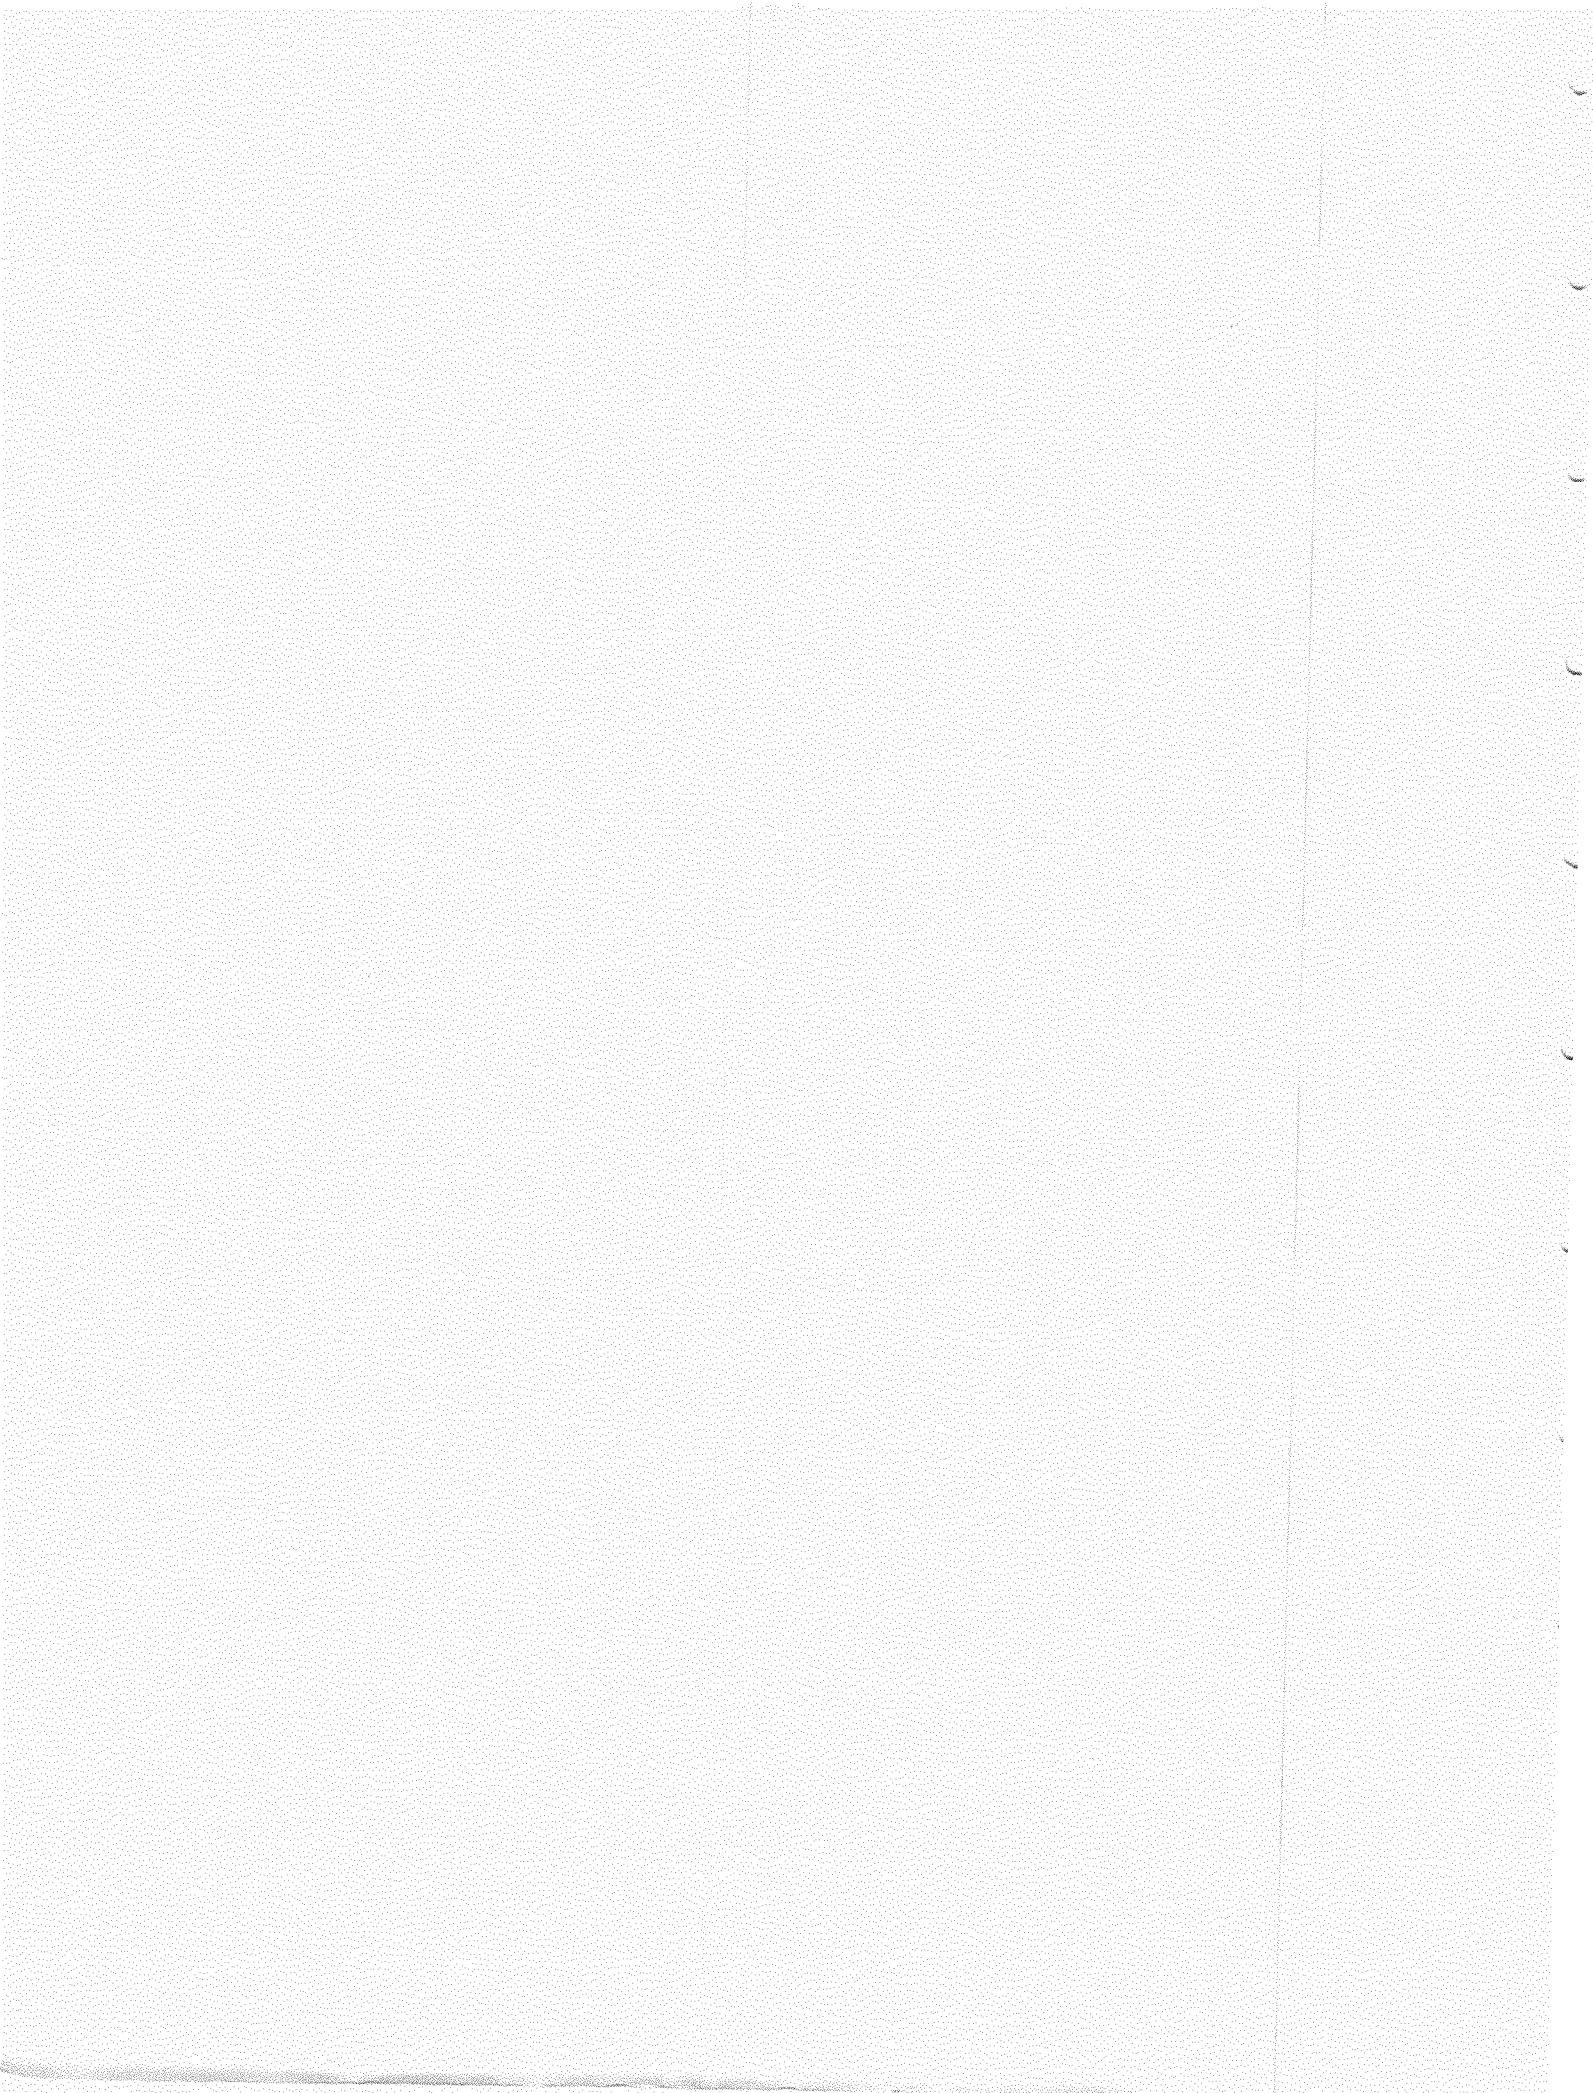

Rather, how to satisfy legitimate Palestinian claims to self-expression while ensuring the security of the state of Israel is the central dilemma. The chief goal must be to resolve the Israeli-Palestinian differences. Which framework can contribute to accomplishing that goal is the important issue current diplomacy should be grappling with.

During the last few years Arab attitudes toward Jewish nationalism have been in flux. Egypt has shown the way toward coexistence and friendship. And Israel's response in withdrawing from Sinai has been most reasonable. But there has also been considerable political and ideological ferment throughout the Arab world and within the Palestinian community itself. It is time for self-evaluation and creative gestures by all parties.

Chicago business executive Philip M. Klutnick is president of the World Jewish Congress. He wrote this as a substitute for vacationing columnist George Anne Geyer.

PHILIP M. KLUTNICK

PINION AND COMMENTARY

A Jewish leader's call for dialogue with Muslims

By Philip M. Klutznick

For too many people "peace" is thought of as a politicized term — something sought by politicians, something achieved by diplomacy.

Yet "peace" in its real sense is the achievement of a social and cultural state of successful human interaction. It is a concept rooted in the traditions and values of the world's great religions and philosophies.

Nations and religious groups within nations manifest hostility and engage in conflict when they feel threatened, abused, or deprived. Yet too often these time-bound perceptions have proved historically invalid — the tears and misery all in vain. Too often we look back with sorrow and regret.

Jews and Muslims have experienced a peculiar form of estrangement throughout most of this century. A similar religious heritage, the common forefather Abraham, and shared Semitic roots have not overcome political aspirations perceived to be antagonistic.

The conflict that developed between Zionism and Arab nationalism, and then between Israel and the Arab states, has permeated the entire framework of Islamic-Jewish relations worldwide. The schism has taken on such absurd dimensions that leaders of the Muslim Brotherhood in Egypt — partly reacting with emotional confusion to the recent Egyptian-Israeli treaty — have declared "Muslims and Jews can never coexist."

This is a doctrine of despair and defeat. That we, Muslims and Jews, together with Christians, are all "people of the book" has been lost from their consciousness.

The irony, of course, is that religious extremists on both sides are guided by such warped interpretations of their own holy books that they have turned the humanistic teachings of their spiritual heritage into license for chauvinistic zealotry and nihilism.

True Jewish tradition, however, is replete with expressions of human brotherhood and social tranquility. In the Gittin Tractate of the Almud (61A) we are instructed that "the Gentile poor are to be supported together with the Jewish poor, and the Gentile sick visited together with the Jewish sick, and the Gentile dead buried with the Jewish dead, in the interests of peace."

The era of intercultural cross-fertilization in medieval times produced like-minded and complementary religious and intellectual work. Co-operation between Islam and Judaism was assumed. Maimonides and Alfarabi are often seen by Westerners as part of the same tradition.

And the great teacher Rabbi Johan of Gerondi in the Iggeret Teshuvah provided a vision quite relevant to today's needs. "And Jews must pick out select men who will impose peace, who will be able to run and enforce peace among men," he taught. "And these select men should be capable of mollifying and conciliating men and imposing peace."

President Sadat has shown all of us, from whatever religious background, what courage and vision can mean when exerted on behalf of political reconciliation and human welfare. Prime Minister Menachem Begin's forthcoming response has demonstrated that previously intractable deadlocks can be overcome. And President Carter has exhibited the finest traditions of his faith in his determined pursuit to steps toward peace.

The political dialogue between Israel and the Arabs, now in embryo and whatever its adequacy in participation and outlook, desperately needs to be supplemented by building modern-day intercultural appreciation between Muslims and Jews.

By making such a plea I do not intend to support this or that concept of what is required for "peace" in the Middle East or this or that strategy for achieving it. Nor will I attempt here the exceedingly important task of defining the institutional relationships that need to be created to pursue this goal of Muslim-Jewish dialogue.

Rather, I simply mean to suggest that Jews and Muslims must now use their best instincts to foster mutual respect. From such a beginning can flow understanding and acceptance.

Throughout the past decade, the World Jewish Congress has pursued a stimulating and productive dialogue with Christianity. Working with the World Council of Churches, Jewish and Christian leaders learned to understand each other's fears and aspirations, to respect each other's moral values, and to appreciate the profound linkages that exist between them.

Just last month I led a delegation of two dozen Jewish leaders in a historic meeting with Pope John Paul II — a meeting which symbolized the new relationship that has been achieved through the joint purposeful efforts of the Vatican and the Jewish community.

A dialogue between leaders of Islam and leaders of world Jewry should be an urgent priority. We need to re-create the bonds that have existed before. And the "comprehensive peace" which politicians speak of requires such a firm foundation for its realization.

Mr. Klutznick is president of the World Jewish Congress and a former US delegate to the United Nations.

